ORDERS FOR THURSDAY

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m. on Thursday, August 1, 1985.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order there be special orders in favor of the following Senators for not to exceed 15 minutes each: Senator SIMON, Senator PROXMIRE, Senator KERRY, and Senator BUMPERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Following the special orders just identified, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 11:30 a.m. with statements limited therein to 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR PERIOD FOR AGRICULTURE DISCUSSION FROM 1 P.M. TO 3 P.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the period from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. be set aside for discussion of various options pending in the Agriculture Committee including the 1-year freeze, the 2-year freeze, the 4-year freeze, the marketing loan plan, or any other options so that we might be able to determine the cost.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, I want to commend the majority leader for what I believe will be a very helpful session of the Senate between 1 and 3 p.m. tomorrow if this unanimous-consent agreement is agreed to.

It will provide the opportunity for Senators to review on the Senate floor what the various cost proposals are. There has been some problem in the committee as we have worked on the bill arriving at what could be accurate figures provided by the Department of Agriculture. I must say as to the Department's figures on costs that many of these requests are made on short notice and the Department finds itself often attempting to give the answer right on the spur of the moment to satisfy the committee members. That is rather difficult.

So I do want to make it clear that the Department, in giving figures, has its own problems in coming up with the answers as quickly as the committee would like it as we mark up a bill.

The majority leader, I know, has had a great concern over this, as has the chairman of the committee and the rest of the membership of the committee. So this discussion tomorrow afternoon will be very helpful and beneficial.

I again commend the majority leader for making the request.

Mr. President, I do not object.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am not going to object. I commend the majority leader for such a meeting, which appears to be on track, to be scheduled tomorrow in the Senate.

While I do see the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Committee on the floor, if I might ask the chairman a question, that question would be this: Will the Agriculture Committee meet in the morning at 10 a.m. as announced earlier?

Mr. HELMS. Will the majority leader yield?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. HELMS. The committee meeting is scheduled for 10 a.m., as I announced.

Mr. PRYOR. I appreciate that information.

Mr. HELMS. We will be coming in tomorrow morning and having our meeting.

Mr. PRYOR. I thank the chairman.

Mr. HARKIN. Will the majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. DOLE. I yield.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, we have had some problems before with some of the numbers from the Department of Agriculture. Is it possible to get any numbers from CBO on the 1-year freeze, the 2-year freeze, the 4-year freeze? Is it possible to get some figures from CBO?

Mr. DOLE. As I understood, the CBO is perfectly willing to give us cost estimates, but they have not revised the baseline. They have indicated to us that they would do that during the month of August. We have the CBO figures for April and January on the baseline but not on July, the revised figures.

It would be my hope that we could at least address USDA figures. I have had figures today saying the 4-year freeze adds $20 billion. I have had figures as high as $80 billion for the cost of the farm bill in the next 4 years. I do not know where we are. It seems to me we may not resolve anything tomorrow but at least we can raise the questions.

I know the chairman has been meeting for well over 2 hours. He has all kinds of figures, I understand.

Mr. HELMS. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, we have indeed been meeting to try to get a handle on what it is we are dealing with. To me, we are at least $20 billion over the budget mark over 4 years, in addition, let me stress, to $32.1 billion in the Senate version of the budget resolution.

I have tried to level with the members of the committee all along, and I think I have, that my concern is that we report a fiscally responsible farm bill. Senators have agreed with that. We have had a harmonious markup period ranging over 9 or 10 weeks. Senators have been free to express themselves. There have been differences about the figures, I may say to the majority leader. Nobody on Earth can say whose estimate is right and whose is wrong 3 years in advance. It depends on a lot of things, weather, markets, et cetera.

But one thing is for sure in terms of the economic aspect: What we need to do in Congress, in my judgment, is to get this Federal deficit under control. That is the unknown quantity. If we can get the deficit under control then the interest rate is going to come down.

I would point out, Mr. President, that every 1 percent drop in the interest rate would mean an additional $2 billion in the pockets of the American farmers.

That is the kind of thing that I have been trying to work out in my mind, I say to the distinguished majority leader. We need to keep in mind that the average net worth of U.S. farmers is in excess of $500,000. The thing that has troubled me about so many of the proposals, is that the small farmer is getting the short end of the stick.

We all make speeches about wanting to look after the small family farmer, but as I perceive where we are, I believe the emphasis in terms of helping farmers has been on those farmers who are in the upper brackets.

These are the concerns I have and which we have been discussing this evening. So I think we are going to have to be careful that we do not try the patience of the taxpayers. I have read the articles in Reader's Digest and other publications and a lot of them are on target. True enough, a lot of people who write about farm legislation do not know very much about it. But I want to be as careful as I may be, just as one Senator, that we do it right this time, because we have made a lot of mistakes in the past.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, will the distinguished chairman yield?

Mr. HELMS. I do not have the floor.

Mr. DOLE. Yes, I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HARKIN. I want to be sure I understand. I thought I heard the Senator say the average net worth of farmers is $500,000. I wonder if the chairman does not mean that the average value of assets held by farmers is $500,000, not the average net worth.

Mr. HELMS. Well, whatever.

Mr. HARKIN. I just do not have any farmers in my State who have that kind of net worth. I think maybe the assets the farmers have may be $500,000. With the debt load they have, that asset value is reduced in many instances down to almost nothing.

I just wanted to correct that, because I did not want to leave the impression that the average net worth of the farmers is $500,000. Maybe the asset value.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, these are the figures I specifically asked for from the staff and they have reassured me that the figures I was given involve farmers having from $40,000 to $100,000 of gross sales. The net worth—the net worth—of these farmers on the average is in excess of $500,000. Perhaps the Senator has information that disagrees with that, but this is the best information we have. This is based on hearing testimony received in hearings this year. It is substantiated data.

The point is, Mr. President, that the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from North Carolina—every Senator on this floor—are concerned about the small farmers. Is that correct, I ask the Senator?

Mr. HARKIN. Yes, Mr. President.

Mr. HELMS. I know I have heard the Senator himself, time and time again in the committee meetings, say we must do something for the small family farmer. I just want to be sure that is what we do.

Some of these payment limitations allow payments in excess of a half million dollars, that sort of thing. I think we ought to take a close look at that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. MELCHER addressed the Chair.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does the distinguished Senator from Montana wish to reserve his right to object?

Mr. MELCHER. Yes, Mr. President.

I would just like to say, if the majority leader would yield to me, Mr. President——

Mr. DOLE. I shall be happy to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. MELCHER. I thank the distinguished majority leader and the Chair.

I think we ought to recognize that they are the assumptions that the Department of Agriculture uses. Anybody can use a computer and CBO can track. It is really the same deal if they use the same assumptions. I think the basis of our questioning is what are these assumptions that the Department of Agriculture is using and are they believable assumptions? That, I assume, is the purpose of the discussion tomorrow, is it not, I ask the majority leader?

Mr. DOLE. That is right, Mr. President.

Mr. MELCHER. I thank the distinguished majority leader.

I might say that perhaps the figure the distinguished chairman of the Agriculture Committee was trying to reach was how much debt do these 100,000 big producers have.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The distinguished majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we are going to discuss this tomorrow, but I would indicate that sooner or later we have to come to grips with the figures. We can all argue about what the basis may be, but it seems to me that we are not going to be able to complete final action. I have checked with the House as recently as an hour ago. They intend to meet again tomorrow. They do not believe they will complete action in committee. There is still some food stamp provisions and farm credit provisions left to be done, I am advised by the chairman, in the Senate Agriculture Committee.

What I seek to avoid is the exercise to see who can spend the most money on agriculture, and perhaps if we had a couple hours of discussion with as much factual information as we could get, then we would be in a better position. But I hope that during the period of time from 11:30 to 1 o'clock we can dispose of the supplemental appropriations conference report as well as any other legislative or executive calendar items which have been cleared for action. And, again, I thank all my colleagues for their cooperation. We have moved a lot of legislation today and we hope to have more. In fact, I see a couple of other items we can do yet this evening. So if Senators can help us work out some of the remaining bills tomorrow and Friday, we will be in fair shape for the August recess.

AGENDA FOR THURSDAY AND FRIDAY

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. BYRD. Is he in a position at this time to state what the program will be after 3 o'clock tomorrow?

Mr. DOLE. There could be the energy and water appropriations bill. The distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee would like to take that bill up tomorrow. I understand there will be a number of amendments which could take several hours, so it may be something we want to start tomorrow, maybe not.

I know that the budget conferees, at least some, are meeting at this very moment and I hope to have a discussion with the chairman of the Budget Committee. There is a possibility we might do that tomorrow if there is an agreement. But I would say that is fairly remote. The South Africa conference report, I understand that there are some who would like to take it up and some who would not. With 2 days left only one side can prevail. So I would guess the energy and water appropriation bill is probably the best candidate. Is there any objection on the Senator's side to taking that up?

Mr. BYRD. I will check that out. Is the distinguished majority leader in a position to indicate what the program will be for Friday?

Mr. DOLE. Friday, it could be the conference report on the budget resolution. Hopefully, we will have disposed of the supplemental. It could be the South Africa conference report. It could be hardly anything. We are getting down to the bottom.

Mr. BYRD. I understand that.

Mr. DOLE. I do not have much left on the list.

Mr. BYRD. Does the majority leader intend to proceed with the recess of the Senate as scheduled, at the close of business Friday?

Mr. DOLE. Yes, that is the intention of the majority leader. In fact, the adjournment resolution will indicate either the close of business tomorrow or the close of business on Friday.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

MYASTHENIA GRAVIS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senate Joint Resolution 183, Myasthenia Gravis Awareness Week, be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

H.R. 2466, U.S. COAST GUARD, HELD AT THE DESK

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 2466, to make miscellaneous changes in laws affecting the U.S. Coast Guard, be held at the desk until the close of business on Thursday, August 1, 1985.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EARTHQUAKE HAZARDS REDUCTION ACT AUTHORIZATION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 817.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 817) entitled "An Act to authorize appropriations under the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977 for fiscal years 1986 and 1987, and for other purposes", do pass with the following amendments:

Page 1, line 9, strike out [$5,705,000], and insert: $5,596,000,

Strike out all after line 18 on page 2 over to and including line 2 on page 3, and insert:

"(E) compile and maintain a written plan for the program specified in subsections (a), (e), (f), and (g), to be submitted to the Congress and updated at such times as may be required by significant program events, but in no event less frequently than every three years;".

SEC. 6. Section 5(b)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 7704(b)(2)) (as amended by section 5 of this Act) is further amended by redesignating subparagraph (F) as subparagraph (G), and by inserting after subparagraph (E) the following new subparagraph:

"(F) make, in cooperation with the United States Geological Survey, the National Science Foundation, and the National Bureau of Standards, an annual presentation to the appropriate committee of the Congress within sixty days after the end of each fiscal year for the purpose of communicating any events and any programmatic requirements deemed significant by the National Earthquake Hazards Reduction Program; and

AMENDMENT NO. 570

(Purpose: Amend provision regarding authorization of appropriations for activities under the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act of 1977 for fiscal years 1986 and 1987, and other purposes)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments with a further Senate amendment which I send to the desk on behalf of Senator GORTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for Mr. GORTON, proposes an amendment numbered 570.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In section 2, strike "35,044,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$35,578,000"; and strike "$36,621,000" and insert in lieu thereof $37,179,000".

In section 6, strike "and" at the end and insert in lieu thereof the following:

and".

Sec. 7. Section 2(b)(3) of the National Bureau of Standards Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1986 (Public Law 99-73) is amended by striking "(7), and (8)" and inserting in lieu thereof "and (7)".

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, S. 817 and S. 818, two authorization bills, have already passed the Senate and the House of Representatives. The amendments I am offering today are the result of negotiations with House Members, and reflect compromises which I believe will pass both Houses of Congress. I want to congratulate my colleagues in the Senate and those on the House Committee on Science and Technology and their staff for their cooperation and work on this legislation.

The amendment to S. 818, the Fire Prevention and Control Act, authorizes appropriations for fiscal year 1986 at $22,037,000. There are two components to this total figure. One is the U.S. Fire Academy, for which the authorization is $13,037,000. This figure restores funds for the travel stipend program at the Fire Academy. The Senate bill restored $1 million for this program; the proposed amendment restores the entire $1.4 million to the Administration's request of $11.637, for a total of $13,037,000.

The second component reflected in the total for S. 818 is the U.S. Fire Administration. This amendment authorizes $9 million for the Fire Administration.

The amendment to S. 817, the Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act, funds the following agencies at the levels described:

	1986	1987
Federal Emergency Management Agency	$5,596,000	$5,848,000
U.S. Geological Survey	35,578,000	37,179,000
National Science Foundation	27,760,000	29,009,000
National Bureau of Standards	499,000	521,000

This amendment reflects reductions from the Senate's authorization levels for the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the National Science Foundation. We have also accepted the House's position that the National Earthquake Hazards Reduction Program plan must be updated every 3, rather than 2 years.

There is an additional amendment to S. 817 to correct a technical error in the National Bureau of Standards Authorization Act for 1986, which the President signed into law on July 29.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to pass these two bills, which reauthorize important programs to protect our citizens' safety.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

FEDERAL FIRE PREVENTION AND CONTROL ACT AUTHORIZATIONS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 818.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 818) entitled "An Act to authorize appropriations for activities under the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974", do pass with the following amendment:

Line 9, strike out [$22,036,000], and insert: $22,953,000

AMENDMENT NO. 571

(Purpose: Amend provision regarding authorization of appropriations for activities under the Federal Fire Prevention and Control Act of 1974)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the House amendment with a further amendment which I send to the desk on behalf of Senator GORTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE], for Mr. GORTON, proposes an amendment numbered 571:

Strike "$22,953,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$22,037,000".

(See Mr. GORTON's statement on the previous measure, S. 817.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

STATE AND LOCAL HIGHWAY SAFETY GRANTS AUTHORIZATION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now turn to the consideration of Calendar No. 263, S. 1529, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration authorization drunk-driving legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1529) to authorize appropriations for State and community highway safety grants, and for other purposes.

There being on objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 572

(Purpose: Add provision regarding minimum drinking age)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of Senators LAUTENBERG and DANFORTH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for Mr. LAUTENBERG and Mr. DANFORTH, proposes an amendment numbered 572.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. 3. Section 158 of title 23, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(2), by striking "the fiscal year" and inserting in lieu thereof "each fiscal year"; and

(2) in subsection (b), by striking "in fiscal year if in any succeeding fiscal year" and inserting in lieu thereof "in the fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1986, or the fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1987, if before the end of the period for which such funds would be available for expenditure under section 118(b) of this title".

Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, the amendment I am offering to the bill introduced by my colleague, Senator DANFORTH, will reaffirm the intent of Congress to achieve a uniform minimum drinking age nationwide of 21. This amendment is necessary to make clear to the States that we are serious about this matter and that we will not stand by and see the States circumvent the intent of the Senate and the Congress. It is essentially the text of S. 1428, which I introduced, with Senator DANFORTH, on July 11.

In July of last year, President Reagan signed into law a bill that would withhold highway construction funds from those States that failed to raise their minimum drinking age to 21 by October 1, 1986. Five percent of fiscal year 1987 funding would be withheld from four highway programs on October 1, 1986, if a State has a minimum drinking age lower than 21. On October 1, 1987, if a State has not taken action, another 10 percent of highway funds would be withheld. At the close of fiscal year 1988, under current law, the withholding will end.

States which take action to raise their minimum drinking age after October 1, 1986, under current law, will have the funds that have been withheld reimbursed.

Mr. President, the law passed by the Congress last June constituted a restrained use of Federal authority to address an interstate problem. Across the Nation, we have blood borders: a State with a higher drinking age bordered by one with a lower minimum drinking age. In these situations, young people have a clear incentive to drive in order to drink. After purchasing and consuming alcohol in a neighboring State, they try to make it home. Too many don't make it.

A uniform minimum drinking age of 21 will solve this problem by removing the incentive to cross State borders in order to drink.

In the last year, 14 States have taken action to raise their minimum drinking ages to 21; 13 States and the District of Columbia have yet to take action. Of the States which acted this past year, most did so in a manner consistent with both the letter and spirit of the law. In a few cases, however, State legislatures exploited technical loopholes in existing law in an attempt to circumvent the will of Congress. In these cases, the States would sunset their 21 minimum drinking age when the Federal withholding of highway funds ends in 1988.

Mr. President, Congress did not pass Public Law 98-363, in order to withhold highway funds. We passed the Uniform Minimum Drinking Age Act in order to reduce the deaths and crippling injuries attributed to drunk driving by those 16 to 21 years of age. Drunk driving is the No. 1 killer of our Nation's young people. This critical age group is the only one in our society that has not increased its life expectancy in the last 20 years. The reason is drunk driving.

A uniform minimum drinking age of 21 will save over 1,000 lives per year. While this act alone will not rid our highways of drunk driving, it will go far to preserving our most precious resource: our children.

The amendment I propose will deal with those States that have exploited technical loopholes in existing law. My amendment will make the 10 percent withholding of highway funds, scheduled to end on September 30, 1988, permanent. This change will conform the statute to that used to enforce the 55-miles-per-hour speed limit. In addition, my amendment will end the reimbursement of highway funds at the close of fiscal year 1988. This change will essentially establish September 30, 1988 as the date by which the Congress wants to see uniformity in minimum drinking ages across the Nation. If uniformity is not achieved by that date, Congress, under this amendment, is prepared to take stronger action. Funds would continue to be reimbursed for fiscal years 1987 and 1988 so long as those funds have not lapsed.

Mr. President, last year we sent a strong signal to the States that there was national support for a minimum drinking age of 21 nationwide. A few States have questioned the seriousness of our intent. If we are serious about a uniform minimum drinking age, we must pass this legislation. As a fiscal matter, this amendment will have no adverse impact on those 37 States that now have 21 as their minimum drinking age. In those States which have tied their minimum drinking age to the existence or nonexistence of Federal sanctions, no highway funds will be withheld, because, through this amendment, we will be making the sanctions permanent. My amendment will not affect their highway funds, it will keep their minimum drinking age at 21.

When Congress passed the Uniform Minimum Drinking Age Act, Mr. President, it contemplated long-term change in minimum drinking ages across the country. It did not contemplate returning to the patchwork quilt of differing State laws after 2 years had passed. If we fail to adopt this amendment, we will find ourselves in 1988 with exactly the situation we sought to avoid when we passed the Uniform Minimum Drinking Age Act of 1984.

Mr. President, the Uniform Minimum Drinking Age Act of 1984 had the support of some 81 Senators on final passage. My distinguished colleague, Senator DANFORTH, was the floor manager of the bill to which it was attached. The bill had the support of groups such as the Mothers Against Drunk Driving, the National Council on Alcoholism, the National Safety Council, and National PTA. Today, I again join with Senator DANFORTH to reaffirm Congress' support for this vital initiative.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, Congress in recent years has taken important steps to address the drunk driving problem in this country. In 1982, I sponsored legislation which encourages States to take more effective action against drunk drivers by providing Federal grants to States with tough drunk driving laws. This incentive grant program is working well; throughout the country States are enacting tougher drunk driving laws. At times, however, more forceful action is necessary to achieve the desired result; this has been the case with the 21-year minimum legal drinking age.

Last year, legislation sponsored by my distinguished colleague Senator LAUTENBERG, Public Law 98-363, was enacted which encourages States to set their minimum legal drinking ages at 21. Specifically, this legislation directs the Department of Transportation [DOT] to withhold 5 percent of the fiscal 1987 and 10 percent of the fiscal 1988 Federal-aid highway funds from any State that permits the purchase or public possession of alcohol by persons under the age of 21. This was, and is, very important legislation. Studies have shown that a uniform drinking age of 21 is one of the most effective means of reducing drunk driving deaths and injuries. Unfortunately, in the years immediately prior to enactment of the 1984 legislation, most States which did not have already a 21-year drinking age chose not to raise their drinking ages to 21. In the months following the enactment of Public Law 98-363 last July, however, several States have taken this important step; we now have 37 States with a minimum legal drinking age of 21. The legislation clearly is working and having its desired effect.

I am concerned, however, about attempts made by some States to circumvent the intent of this important legislation. The 1984 bill requires DOT to withhold highway construction funds from States with drinking ages below 21 for fiscal years 1987 and 1988. This sanction was intended to render long-term benefits. Some States, however, may thwart this important goal by such means as establishing a 21-year drinking age only for the period during which highway funds are to be withheld; after that time, the State's drinking age would revert back to a lower level. Clearly, this violates the intent of last year's legislation.

Mr. President, the amendment being offered today by Senator LAUTENBERG and myself would remedy this situation by requiring DOT to withhold 10 percent of a State's highway construction funds in each fiscal year following fiscal 1987 if that State's minimum legal drinking age is less than 21. This amendment is consistent with the intent of Public Law 98-363 and will go a long way toward ensuring that the "blood border" problem of recent years will not reemerge.

Mr. President, this amendment will help save lives by reducing drunk driving accidents. I urge my colleagues to join me in support of this important amendment.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I support the adoption of the Lautenbery amendment, which would make permanent the withholding of highway funds from States that have not adopted the national minimum drinking age of 21.

Last June, the Senate overwhelmingly approved Senator LAUTENBERG's legislation to encourage States to raise their drinking age to 21. The measure, which is now law, penalizes States which haven't done so by withholding 5 percent of their Federal highway funds in 1987 and 10 percent in 1988. The amendment before us today would extend that 10 percent withholding indefinitely.

Already we are beginning to see benefit from last year's legislation. As of last June, when the Lautenberg legislation was passed, 23 States had minimum drinking ages of 21. Since then, 14 more States have acted to raise their drinking ages, and others are considering such a move. It is still too early to determine exactly how many lives have been saved because of this, but existing studies do show a direct correlation between a higher drinking age and fewer teenage alcohol-related traffic deaths.

Normally, I am very suspicious of any measure which exerts Federal power in areas which have traditionally been left to State and local control. However, when the Federal Government can act to save a substantial number of lives, then I believe it should act. Indeed, this is a paramount function of Government.

This type of Federal action is necessary and proper for one primary reason—the existence of differing minimum legal drinking ages in adjoining States becomes an incentive for many young people to drive across State lines in order to obtain and consume liquor. Drunk driving among younger adults is something this Congress should want to discourage, not encourage. And a uniform, 21-year-old legal drinking age is the only way to prevent young Americans from commuting across these "blood borders."

Numerous studies, including those by the National Transportation Safety Board and the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety, have concluded that the uniform drinking age will save a great deal of lives.

The concern expressed by the Senator from New Jersey—and it is a concern which I share—is that the existing law may not go far enough to bring about a permanent, uniform national drinking age among our 50 States. Already there is some indication that certain State legislatures are considering "sunsetting" their higher drinking age laws, so that they'll revert back to age 18 or 19 after 1988, when the withholding of highway funds will no longer be in effect. This is reason enough to enact the amendment before us today. It will make permanent a 10-percent withholding of Federal funds for States which have not adopted the minimum drinking age. Thus, if 5 years from now a State decides to lower its drinking age to 18, it will lose funding.

There is no question in my mind that this is what our constituents want—a permanent national uniform drinking age of 21. And I commend the Senator from New Jersey for his tireless efforts to achieve this end. I know much of his vigor on this issue stems from his own personal experience in watching the lowering of his State's drinking age to 18 a number of years back, and the subsequent tripling of the death rate among young people due to drunk driving. He watched that rate drop by one-half a couple of years ago, when New Jersey raised the legal drinking age back up to 21.

But there's not much the people of New Jersey can do about laws in neighboring States, and that's why it is important that Congress do what it can to encourage all States to adopt the national minimum drinking age. Thanks to last year's legislation, New York and Connecticut have acted to raise their drinking ages to 21. Soon 18, 19, and 20 year olds in New Jersey will have no incentive to drive across the border into New York State, purchase and consume alcoholic beverages, and then drive home, at great risk to their own lives and those of other drivers. The amendment before us today will help ensure that we won't face this same problem several years from now.

Mr. President, this amendment is yet another step toward making our roads and highways as safe as they can be. I am sure it will save lives. And that's reason enough to pass it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 572) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 573

(Purpose: Provide authorization of appropriations for highway safety research and development programs)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator DANFORTH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), for Mr. DANFORTH, proposes an amendment numbered 573.

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. . Section 403 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(g) There is authorized to be appropriated for purposes of carrying out this section not to exceed $31,000,000 for fiscal year 1987.".

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, this legislation authorizes funding for important highway safety programs. The amendment I am offering today provides an authorization for funding of the Department of Transportation's [DOT] Highway Safety Research and Development Program, established by the Highway Safety Act of 1966. My amendment authorizes funding for this program of $31 million for fiscal 1987; this funding level is identical to the authorization already provided for fiscal 1986.

Mr. President, our continued support of the Department's highway safety research and development activities is vital to efforts to reduce highway deaths and injuries. This amendment will enhance the development of more effective highway safety programs. I encourage my colleagues to support this funding authorization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 573) was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the Department of Transportation's National Highway Traffic Safety Administration [NHTSA] has been directed by Congress to promote highway safety and thereby save lives and reduce the number of injuries resulting from traffic accidents. Testimony presented by NHTSA to the Commerce Committee shows that there have been meaningful improvements in highway safety in recent years. Nevertheless, approximately 43,800 people died in highway accidents in 1984. NHTSA must be encouraged, therefore, to continue and strengthen its efforts to further improve highway safety.

The legislation before us today will help these safety efforts, by authorizing funding for two important highway safety programs.

The first section of this bill authorizes funding for fiscal 1987 for the State and Community Highway Safety Grant Program, the so-called Section 402 Program. Under this program, States receive funds from the Department of Transportation to conduct various highway safety programs. The legislation we are considering today authorizes funding of $132 million for this safety program; this funding level is equivalent to the fiscal 1986 authorization provided in Public Law 98-363.

Section 2 of this legislation authorizes funding for fiscal year 1987 of $29,232,000 for the Drunk Driving Incentive Grant Program established in 1982 by Public Law 97-364. Funds are not authorized for fiscal 1986 because I understand from NHTSA that sufficient funds, appropriated in previous years, exist to meet this program's needs during fiscal 1986. This program, which encourages States to enact tougher drunk driving laws, has been working well. Public Law 97-364 provides for a two-tier Incentive Grant Program. States become eligible for a basic grant if they meet four criteria: Prompt license supsension; mandatory imprisonment or community service for repeat drunk driving offenders; defining a 0.10-percent blood alcohol content as per se evidence of intoxication; and increased enforcement and public education efforts. Under the provisions of the 1982 law, States can qualify for further funding under the Supplemental Grant Program if they meet additional criteria specified by NHTSA, along with the four basic grant criteria. To date, according to NHTSA, 16 States have qualified for basic grants; 13 of these States also have qualified for supplemental grants. I understand that several other States are working to meet the grant criteria of the 1982 law.

Mr. President, the legislation before us today will enhance highway safety efforts, not only by the Federal Government but also by State highway safety agencies. We must ensure that continued funding is available for these important highway safety programs.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 1529

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 203(a)(1) of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 (Public Law 97-424; 96 Stat. 2138) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" after "1985,"; and

(2) by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", and $132,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987".

(b) Section 203(b) of the Surface Transportation Assistance Act of 1982 (Public Law 97-424; 96 Stat. 2138) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" after "1985," wherever it appears;

(2) by inserting immediately after "1986," the following: ", and $132,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987,"; and

(3) by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ", and September 30, 1987".

SEC. 2. The first sentence of section 408(g) of title 23, United States Code, is amended by striking all after "Fund," and inserting in lieu thereof "$29,232,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987."

SEC. 3. Section 158 of title 23, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(2), by striking "the fiscal year" and inserting in lieu thereof "each fiscal year"; and

(2) in subsection (b), by striking "in fiscal year if in any succeeding fiscal year" and inserting in lieu thereof "in the fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1986, or the fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1987, if before the end of the period for which such funds would be available for expenditure under section 118(b) of this title".

SEC. 4. Section 403 of title 23, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(g) There is authorized to be appropriated for purposes of carrying out this section not to exceed $31,000,000 for fiscal year 1987.".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

RECESS UNTIL 10 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there being no further business to come before the Senate, I move the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 10 a.m., Thursday, August 1, 1985.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, at 9:30 p.m., recessed until Thursday, August 1, 1985, at 10 a.m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Wednesday, July 31, 1985

The House met at 11 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Help us, gracious God, to see the vision of a just and peaceful world, when people have their own traditions and yet respect others. May our pride in our history and the blessings we have received not blind us to see that all peoples are objects of Your creation and we are all sustained by Your love. May Your benediction be with each one this day and every day. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 2908. An act to amend title XI of the Education Amendments of 1978, relating to Indian education programs.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1160) "An act to authorize appropriations for the military functions of the Department of Defense and to prescribe personnel levels for the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1986, to authorize certain construction at military installations for such fiscal year, to authorize appropriations for the Department of Energy for national security programs for such fiscal year, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 505. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to improve the delivery of health care services by the Veterans' Administration, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 367. An act to amend title 38, United States Code, to establish certain procedures for the adjudication of claims for benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration; to apply the provisions of section 553 of title 5, United States Code, to rulemaking procedures of the Veterans' Administration; to provide for judicial review of certain final decisions of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs; to provide for the payment of reasonable fees to attorneys for rendering legal representation to individuals claiming benefits under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration; and for other purposes;

S. 415. An act to amend the Education of the Handicapped Act to authorize the award of reasonable attorneys' fees to certain prevailing parties, and to clarify the effect of the Education of the Handicapped Act on rights, procedures, and remedies under other laws relating to the prohibition of discrimination; and

S. 1514. An act to approve the Interstate Cost Estimate and Interstate Substitute Cost Estimate.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER. The Chair announces that to expedite the business of the day he will postpone recognition for the 1-minute speeches until sometime later in the day.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 960, INTERNATIONAL SECURITY AND DEVELOPMENT COOPERATION ACT OF 1985

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the order of the House of July 25, 1985, I call up the conference report on the Senate bill (S. 960) entitled "An act to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, the Arms Export Control Act, and other acts to authorize appropriations for the fiscal year 1986 for international security and development assistance, the Peace Corps, the Inter-American Foundation, and the African Development Foundation, and for other purposes," and ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of July 30, 1985, at page H6702.)

Mr. FASCELL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the statement be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report on S. 960—H.R. 1555 as it passed the House—is very similar to the bipartisan bill which the House passed by voice vote earlier this month.

All the principal features in the House version were maintained in the conference, and I am pleased to report that the conference went well from the standpoint of both sides. All of the conferees from both Houses joined in signing the report. The other body passed the conference report yesterday by voice vote. I am hoping for equally prompt passage here.

I would like to pay tribute to my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BROOMFIELD], and other minority members who so ably served in representing the House interest at the conference, along with my majority colleagues. From the other body, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, Senator LUGAR, and the ranking minority member, Senator PELL, and their colleagues worked with equal diligence and were willing to proceed expeditiously to settle any differences between us. Our staff assisted us with dedication and competence throughout.

The result is that we were able to finish the conference in 1 day, working into the night. And we have a good bill which deserves overwhelmingly approval by the House.

The total annual authorization in the conference report is $12,774,281,000, a compromise between the $12,638,011,000 in the House bill and the $12,824,877,500 in the Senate bill.

The conference report we agreed to is below the President's budget and is still essentially a freeze—just slightly below the appropriation level which the Congress enacted for fiscal year 1985.

I am glad to say that the Senate, which had a 1-year authorization, receded to the House which had a 2-year bill. So we have a 2-year authorization in which the second year, fiscal 1987, is a straight line—a straight freeze—of all the numbers for fiscal 1986. It contains no upward allowance for inflation or any other factor.

This bill, as Members know, authorizes programs which are absolutely vital to American interests around the world. Its security assistance enhances our own security by strengthening our friends and allies and those who provide facilities for American forces abroad. It provides economic assistance in areas of special concern to the United States such as the Middle East. It assists in the self-help economic development of poor countries, who in turn are getting to become among the best customers for American exports. And most of the money for this so-called foreign aid actually is spent right here in the United States, which means jobs and business for Americans.

An indispensable factor, as far as I am concerned, is the support that passage of this conference report will give to the legislative process as a whole. The Congress will be voting foreign assistance in an appropriations bill or a continuing resolution, anyway. What this bill does is provide authorization according to the proper legislative process, and it provides the key instrument through which the Congress can exercise its proper role in foreign affairs.

This is the first time since 1981 that the Congress will have done this according to the proper procedure. That in itself commends this conference report to the House. Further, there are a number of congressional initiatives in this bill of which we should be particularly proud. Highlights of the conference report include:

ANTITERRORISM

Authorizes $9,840,000 a year for antiterrorism assistance; gives the President authority to ban trade with Libya and any other country that supports terrorism and report this action to Congress; expresses sense of Congress that all civilized nations condemn use of terrorism and cites the murder of Army Maj. Arthur Nicholson by a Soviet soldier; calls on the President to seek creation of an international committee to secure cooperation of other nations to combat terrorism, and to negotiate treaties to respond more effectively to terrorist attacks through close intelligence sharing and uniform laws on asylum, extradition and swift punishment of terrorists.

AIRPORT SECURITY

Calls for strict security measures at international airports to curtail aircraft hijackings and sabotage; requires publication of airports that fail to meet minimum standards within 90 days of notification and the traveling public so advised; requires the President to suspend foreign aid to high-terrorist-threat nations that fail to meet security standards—this can be waived if the President determines national security interest or humanitarian emergency exists; authorizes study on need to expand the U.S. Air Marshal Program and allow marshals to carry firearms and make arrests; calls on Secretary of State to secure international agreements for vigorous enforcement of airport security standards.

NARCOTICS

Authorizes $57 million to fight international narcotics traffic; imposes economic sanctions against Bolivia and Peru unless they improve their antinarcotics efforts; repeals the Mansfield amendment which prohibited U.S. agents from being present at foreign drug arrests; provides defensive armaments for foreign aircraft being used to combat drugs; requires study to determine feasibility of establishing a Latin American regional narcotics control organization, and calls on the President to negotiate updated treaties on extradition and bank confidentiality where narcotics are involved.

ANGOLA

Repeals Clark amendment, thereby giving the President authority to provide military or other assistance to the freedom fighters opposing the Marxist government; White House supported repeal but has not requested funds for this purpose; Cuba maintains a force of 25,000 troops in Angola.

MIDDLE EAST

Israel continues to be chief beneficiary of U.S. aid with $3 billion a year authorized, plus $1.5 billion in emergency economic assistance; Egypt would receive $2.1 billion, plus $500 million in emergency economic aid.

PHILIPPINES

Provides a total of $180 million on U.S. base-related assistance a year but shifts emphasis from military to economic aid: $70 million for military assistance—down 30 percent from administration request—and $110 million in economic aid; statutory requirement makes clear Congress can defer future assistance unless Philippines implements fundamental reforms.

CAMBODIA

Provides $5 million a year in military or economic aid to the anti-Communist Cambodian resistance forces; prohibited, however, to Khmer Rouge.

NICARAGUA

Authorizes $27 million in humanitarian aid to the anti-Sandinista guerrillas but requires that aid be channeled through an agency other than the CIA or Department of Defense.

EL SALVADOR AND GUATEMALA

Supports efforts of President Duarte to bring democracy and social and economic development to El Salvador, and efforts to establish democratic institutions in Guatemala.

GREECE AND TURKEY

Maintains present 7-10 ratio in U.S. military assistance; Greece would get $500 million and Turkey, $714 million.

OTHER

Provides full funding through fiscal year 1989 to implement recommendations of Kissinger Commission; expands existing authorities facilitating joint weapons projects between U.S. and NATO allies; tightens up costing formula for sale of military training to achieve a savings estimated at up to $100 million.

Mr. Speaker, I have received additionally some specific questions from the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] to which I will be happy to provide answers at this point:

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Does this legislation earmark any ESF for Ecuador in fiscal years 1986 and 1987?

Mr. FASCELL. The Foreign Affairs Committee does not generally earmark funds. Thus, the bill does not contain an earmark in the ESF account for Ecuador. However, I know that President Febres-Cordero recently requested President Reagan to provide ESF in this and subsequent fiscal years for his country. In addition, I would say that the fact that funds are not earmarked in this need in no way prejudice their request for such assistance. On the contrary, Ecuador's economic reform program, social policies, and human rights record, make it highly deserving of such aid.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. How does the conference report treat our committee's recommendation with respect to ESF for Ecuador during the next 2 fiscal years?

Mr. FASCELL. The administration recommended $15 million in ESF for Ecuador in fiscal years 1986 and 1987. There is no ceiling on ESF for Ecuador in the bill. Indeed, I would suggest to the administration, that this is a minimum amount that should be provided. I would hope that the actual level of ESF exceeds the administration's original request.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Do we make any recommendation with respect to a reprogramming of ESF for Ecuador for this fiscal year, and would the gentleman be supportive of such a reprogramming if the State Department were to take such action?

Mr. FASCELL. The bill does not make any such recommendation with respect to a reprogramming of unexpended fiscal year 1985 funds. Nonetheless, I would say that the State Department should not wait for the new fiscal year before acting on Ecuador's request for ESF. Ecuador has real needs and is facing serious threats from antidemocratic forces in the region.

In order for Febres-Cordero's program to succeed, he needs to receive U.S. aid now—not later. So I would say that I would be very supportive and, indeed, favor the State Department's reprogramming of unexpended funds from the fiscal year 1985 ESF account to Ecuador.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I join in support of the conference report before us. Thanks to a spirit of compromise and the hard dedicated work of both members and staff, the report before us was made possible. In particular, I want to commend the excellent work of the conferees and the outstanding contributions of Senator LUGAR and Chairman FASCELL. Also, the dedicated work of committee staff directors Jeff Bergner, Jack Brady, and Everett Bierman, and their associates contributed significantly to achieving this commendable agreement.

For the first time in 4 years, we have been able to agree to a foreign aid authorization bill, the levels of which are below the 1985 freeze levels. We have been able to put this bill together in spite of a lack of cooperation on the part of the Department of State. It is obvious that many in the bureaucracy misread the will of the American people regarding excessive spending. This conference report clearly expressed Congress' sensitivity to the high budget deficits and the concerns which many people have regarding unreasonable amounts of foreign aid. The conference report also represents a commitment on the part of the conferees regarding the importance of maintaining the authorizing function, a key element in the democratic process of this institution.

The conference committee resolved important issues affecting the security of America and our friends and allies around the world. In particular, we agreed to ease some of the congressional restraints on the President's power to conduct foreign policy by providing assistance to freedom fighters in Nicaragua, Cambodia, and Afghanistan, as well as lifting the Clark amendment ban on assistance to the freedom fighters in Angola. Progress was also made in the area of Presidential flexibility in dealing with Jordan and the Philippines. Ways to better combat international terrorism were also addressed by the conferees. In particular, new and firm approaches will be taken by our Government toward countries with inadequately secured international airports.

Although I still have reservations about some provisions which tend to micromanage the foreign policy process, I do support the conference report before us. With these concerns in mind, I urge my colleagues to join me in adopting the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT].

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the conference report on S. 960, the Foreign Assistance Act. I would, however, like to direct my colleagues' attention to part 2 of title 5 of this bill which deals with foreign airport security.

As we all know, aircraft hijacking and sabotage have, unfortunately, become more frequent in the past few weeks. There are many reasons for this. One of the major ones is the lax security at some foreign airports. This body recognized that problem last June and responded quickly by passing H.R. 2796, the Foreign Air Travel Security Act of 1985, a bill originally introduced by the leadership of our committee, the Public Works and Transportation Committee. Shortly after that bill was passed, our committee sat down with the Foreign Affairs Committee and developed a new and improved version to better protect foreign air travelers from terrorist actions. As you know, this revised bill also was passed as an amendment to H.R. 1555, the Foreign Assistance Act. It was as part of this act that our antiterrorism bill went to conference with the other body and comes before you today.

It is unfortunate that our antiterrorism measure has become bound up in the Foreign Assistance Act. The antiterrorism portion of this act—title 5—would be extremely beneficial. It emerged from conference with few changes from the House-passed version. It continues to direct the Secretary of Transportation to assess security at foreign airports.

The assessment will be based on the standards and appropriate recommended practices of the International Civil Aviation Organization [ICAO]. If an airport is found to be deficient, the foreign government involved will have 90 days to solve the problem. Failure to do so could result in a number of sanctions against the airport. These could include a complete cut off of air service between the United States and the offending airport. Loss of access to the U.S. market would put heavy pressure on the foreign government to bring its security measures up to standard.

In addition, title 5 of the conference report includes public notice provisions so that a traveler is aware of potential dangers and can make an informed decision whether or not to go. The required notice would take the form of a sign at all U.S. airports and a written notice provided to the passenger when buying a ticket from an airline or travel agent. The public could also receive notice under title 5 through the news media or by a travel advisory.

There are several other provisions in title 5 that are also beneficial. For instance, there is a provision calling for a study of an expanded Air Marshal Program on international flights of U.S. airlines. Air marshals could be an effective means of deterring hijacking in some cases.

Mr. Speaker, title 5 of S. 960 could be very helpful in our war against terrorism. If it were standing alone, I would certainly support it. In this connection, I note that both Houses have passed separate antiterrorism measures that do stand alone.

I am hopeful that, even if S. 960 should be defeated, the differences between these other antiterrorism bills can be resolved so that final passage of these important measures can be achieved.

I am confident that all my colleagues support our goal of preventing hijacking and sabotage of civil aircraft. We should not let a possible setback here deter us from enacting measures that further that goal.

● Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to elaborate on the gentleman's remarks on the airport security portion of S. 960—part 2 of title V. It is a comprehensive measure and one which, if it were not included in this particular bill, would be most worthy of my colleagues' support.

Part 2 of title V of this conference report represents the combined efforts of the committees with jurisdiction over foreign affairs and civil aviation to develop legislation to effectively address the problem of international terrorism committed against commercial air transportation. As such, it contains provisions which were embodied in H.R. 2796—which was adopted by this body on June 19—as well as provisions included in H.R. 1555 and S. 1436.

This portion of the conference report requires an assessment of foreign airports to determine whether a particular facility meets internationally approved security standards. This assessment will be made primarily by the Secretary of Transportation in consultation with the Secretary of State as to the nature of the terrorist threat which may exist in that country. Any airport which is determined to be deficient in its security procedures will be so notified and will have 90 days in which to correct the deficiencies. If remedial steps are not taken within that time, a travel advisory may be issued by the State Department and additional steps will be taken by DOT and the airlines to advise passengers that the airport does not meet internationally approved security standards.

The bill also requires the immediate issuance of a travel advisory, as well as the other forms of public notice, in those special cases where a condition exists which jeopardizes the safety of passengers, crew, or the aircraft.

Part 2 of title V also expands the authority of DOT to suspend or revoke the operating rights of United States and foreign carriers to serve the problem airport and also broadens the authority of the administration to take similar action against the air carriers of other nations which continue to serve it. It authorizes, and in some cases requires, the immediate termination of various forms of foreign aid to any country which does not bring its airport up to standards. These sanctions could be imposed if the foreign government fails to correct security deficiencies within 90 days—although immediate action (without notice and hearing) can be taken to suspend the operating rights of any air carrier or foreign air carrier to serve the United States upon a determination by DOT that a condition exists which threatens the safety of passengers and crew.

Part 2 of title V also requires a study of an expanded Domestic Air Marshal Program. It gives DOT the authority, with the approval of the Attorney General, to authorize air marshals to carry weapons and make arrests. Further, it provides an authorization of $5 million to accelerate the FAA's research and development of more sophisticated devices for the detection of explosives. The conference report also requires the Departments of Transportation and State to continue seeking the cooperation of foreign governments on international terrorism through bilateral agreements and through various international forums.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this portion of the conference report contains some constructive measures to address the continuing problem of international terrorism. It recognizes the legitimate interests of both the State Department and the Transportation Department and the degree of expertise within these agencies relative to terrorism and airport security.

I know all of my colleagues are outraged over this continuing international problem and many ideas have been offered to assist the President in his efforts to put a stop to this murderous conduct. All of us know that our best solutions lie in the coordinated action of the world community to isolate nations involved in terrorism and to assure that those who perpetrate these lawless acts are brought to justice. While we must pursue these objectives, we must also take steps to ensure that other countries are not allowed to disregard these prudent measures without facing severe international sanctions.

I want to take this opportunity to commend by colleagues for taking swift action to address these important issues. I think all would agree that it is a very constructive step in the fight against terrorism. I would also like to inform my colleagues that if this conference report is not adopted, I fully expect that we will bring back to this body a separate antiterrorism bill similar to this portion of S. 960.●

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon in strong support of the conference report to H.R. 1555, the fiscal, 1986 foreign assistance authorization bill. I was one of the conferees on this legislation, and was pleased to have assisted in creating a compromise foreign aid bill which, I believe, can and should be supported by Members on both sides of the aisle.

Foreign economic, humanitarian, food, and security assistance serves vital U.S. interests and insures a positive and visible U.S. presence across the globe. Our economic and humanitarian assistance provides much-needed aid to nations suffering from drought, famine, economic hardship, and more. Our security assistance programs provide a shield behind which the struggle for economic expansion and human rights can continue. In no small fashion, this foreign aid bill contributes to the overall security and well-being of not only our allies—be it our NATO, OAS, or ASEAN allies—but also of the United States itself.

Let me now turn to some specific provisions of the bill which I particularly support.

Democracy as a political institution in Latin America is on the rise. This bill supports that "democratic revolution" now sweeping through the region. I can recall when our aid package for El Salvador was the subject of heated debate. Many interested observers questioned whether the U.S. Congress would muster the political resolve to assist that fledgling democracy in its struggle against forces determined to see the democratic option fail. This bill recognizes the importance of El Salvador, the strides that that nation has made under President Jose Napoleon Duarte, and provides a significant level of assistance in order to allow further progress to take place. The bill calls for reports by the President, not certification, of progress in El Salvador. It follows recommendations of the Kissinger/Jackson Commission in authorizing funding for Central America for 5 years. This will provide credibility to the United States and encourage our allies.

In addition, the bill sends a strong signal to the enemies of the United States that the Congress will no longer stand idly by while freedom fighters in areas as diverse as Latin America, South and Southeast Asia, and Africa cry out for American assistance. In Afghanistan, courageous men and women have banded together in armed opposition to the brutal and repressive Communist puppet regime installed by the Soviets. They deserve our wholehearted support. An amendment I sponsored was adopted which provides $15 million in humanitarian aid to the Afghan people.

In Southeast Asia, following the withdrawal of American forces from Vietnam, the Communist North consolidated its power over the South and proceeded to extend its iron grip over all of Indochina. Cambodia, already ravaged by the bloody reign of terror at the hands of the murderous Pol Pot, was the object of further aggression, this time at the hands of the Vietnamese. Today, pro-West forces are struggling to maintain a viable option to Pol Pot's forces, should the Vietnamese ever agree to leave or be driven out. This group is also deserving of our assistance.

The democratic resistance in Nicaragua also looks to the United States for assistance in their continued efforts to bring pressure to bear upon the Marxist-Leninist Sandinista regime in Managua. Of course, without this pressure, the hopes for change within Nicaragua remain slim. The democratic alternative, also known as the Contras, is an important component of our overall strategy of getting the Sandinistas to relinquish their stranglehold on freedom and democracy in Nicaragua, only 900 miles from the United States border.

The Congress also removed a remaining limit on the President's foreign policymaking powers—that is, the Clark amendment. In Angola, as a result of the antiwar hysteria which gripped the Congress during the Vietnam war, this body placed restrictions on the President's ability to pressure the Marxist MPLA regime in Angola by assisting legitimate and worthy freedom fighters in that western Africa nation. Such a hands-off policy failed when some 30,000 Cuban troops under Castro's orders took their positions to insure the continued survival of that ruthless Communist dictatorship. Congress wisely removed this restriction.

In addition, the bill provides needed and useful assistance to our friends and allies across the globe, in all regions and on all continents.

Foreign aid is not a so-called easy vote for any of us. It may not directly benefit the "folks back home." It does, however, benefit our friends and allies in their struggle for economic development, the eradication of hunger, malnutrition and disease, and provide much-needed security assistance to those nations confronting a direct Communist threat. It would be folly to abandon those friends and allies and, again, I urge my colleagues to vote for this compromise conference report.●

● Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report. I would like to take special note of part 2 of title V of the conference report which establishes a program to help our government improve security at foreign airports. This section of the conference report was developed in a cooperative effort between the Committee on Public Works and Transportation and the Committee on Foreign Affairs. I wish to express our appreciation to Chairman FASCELL, the ranking minority member, Mr. BROOMFIELD, and the other members of the Foreign Affairs Committee for their cooperation in developing this important legislation.

The Foreign Airport Security Program established by the conference report will give our Government important new tools to improve security at foreign airports. It will help prevent a repetition of the tragedy at Athens, where our Government knew for many years that there were security deficiencies at the airport, but did not give U.S. citizens any warning of the problems until after the TWA hijacking.

Under the provisions of the conference report, the Secretary of Transportation will be required to assess security at all foreign airports receiving international air service from the United States. If there are security deficiencies and the situation is not corrected in 90 days, a number of steps will be taken to ensure that prospective airline passengers are aware of the problems. In these cases the conference report requires the Secretary of Transportation to notify the news media of the security problems. The Secretary must also require that signs be posted at U.S. airports to give the public notice of the problems. In addition, U.S. and foreign air carriers will be required to provide notice to prospective passengers of security problems which exist at the time the passenger is issued a ticket.

The conference report further provides for sanctions against foreign airports which do not remedy security deficiencies. The sanctions include suspension of air service and, in appropriate cases, issuance of a travel advisory and suspension of foreign aid.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that these sanctions will give our Government substantial leverage in its efforts to improve security at foreign airports. Even if these efforts are not successful, the legislation will ensure that our passengers will have notice of security problems and will be able to make an informed choice as to whether they wish to travel to the airport.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that these provisions in the conference report will make an important contribution to improving the safety and security of international air travel. I urge my colleagues to join with me in adopting the conference report.●

● Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to offer my strong support for the foreign airport security provisions contained in part 2 of title V of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1985. I wish also to thank the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. FASCELL, who has so forcefully advocated the views of his committee and graciously cooperated with me and other members of the Aviation Subcommittee in developing these provisions. All of us here in the House owe him a debt of gratitude. His cooperative spirit and effective advocacy were equaled by the other distinguished members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and their staff, all of whom have worked long and hard with the Public Works and Transportation Committee to arrive at the carefully balanced program, which is contained in this conference report, to combat aviation terrorism.

The recent tragic hijacking and bombings have more than demonstrated the need for improved aviation security. These provisons of S. 960 will ensure that our Government assesses the security situation at foreign airports and advises the traveling public where there are deficiencies. The legislation also provides for a variety of notices and actions—and in some cases, sanctions—to encourage foreign countries to cooperate with us in improving security.

Chairman FASCELL and the Foreign Affairs Committee's support in this regard makes it difficult not to support this conference report. However, I cannot support it because of my continued opposition to any measure which authorizes aid to the Contras in Nicaragua and my strong concern about some of the other provisions in the report.

I have opposed aid to the Contras for several years because I cannot support the administration's policy of putting militaristic solutions before negotiations in addressing our problems with Nicaragua's Sandinista government. I am also opposed to sending $5 million to Kampuchean non-Communist forces fighting the Vietnamese occupying force in their country. While I am sympathetic to the cause of the non-Communist alliance, I believe it is rash to send funds for arms purchases into a region and a conflict for which there is currently no clearly formulated U.S. policy.

Furthermore, I am opposed to certain Central American countries being exempted from the current ban on aid to foreign police forces. I do not think a clear need for police assistance has been demonstrated by El Salvador and Honduras. We forget too soon the unsavory role that the right wing police forces in such countries have played in the abuse of human rights. I am opposed to the elimination of the certification requirement for aid to El Salvador. We have seen progress made by President Duarte in human rights, yet I strongly believe this progress results in part from the pressures and conditions exerted by Congress.

I am opposed to the repeal of the Clark amendment. We cannot afford to exacerbate the problems of our failing policy in southern Africa by allowing for the possibility that the CIA will again create havoc in Angola. Finally, I am opposed to the level of military aid authorized in the conference report for the government of President Marcos of the Philippines without any conditions set for restoring democracy and bringing about other much needed political and military reforms.

This House in recent months has fallen in love with liberation movements worldwide. As long as a movement is non-Communist and anti-Communist, we seem to be all too happy to send U.S. funds, military aid, and other signals of support to that movement. In our hurry to appear tough on Communists, we are forgetting that before we become involved in lending our support to a party in a conflict, we must determine that there is a clear and justifiable reason for our involvement, and a well enunciated policy to guide our actions.

Mr. Speaker, because of these deep concerns that I have expressed, I regret that I cannot support S. 960. My vote against S. 960 is in no way related to my strong belief that the airport security provisions make an important contribution to the battle against aviation terrorism.

Thank you very much.●

● Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, it was with little pleasure that I cast my vote against the agreement, reached in conference between the House of Representatives and the Senate, on the foreign aid bill.

I have a heartfelt sense of frustration that this legislative body has shirked its responsibilities to the American people, both within the United States and throughout the Western Hemisphere. The funds provided for so-called humanitarian aid to Contra forces fighting the government of Nicaragua is, in reality, nothing but blood money stained and tainted by the deaths of thousands of innocent civilians it will help murder.

The citizens of the United States do not want to be a part of this ruthless and unprovoked CIA war, and so I have therefore voted against the foreign aid bill on these moral grounds. I stand by my record and will continue to work vigorously in support of the programs that provide relief and assistance to those nations that are attempting to overcome the hardships that are associated with modernization and/or poverty.

It is clear that I have actively promoted funding for health programs, indigenous energy resource efforts and educational and human resource development. These are the tools of peace and the cornerstones of democracy. And in pursuit of these ideals I have not shyed away from the fact that, in their defense it is at times necessary to resort to military aid. This is the case in our relationship with the State of Israel. But the important point, not to be missed is that this assistance is coupled with intense and ongoing negotiations at the highest levels of government.

No doubt that if the administration was consistent in its foreign policy endeavors and the Sandinistas were treated on an equal par as the Syrians, the war in Nicaragua would not have escalated to this dangerous point.●

● Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I rise in reluctant opposition to the conference report on the 1986–87 foreign aid authorization (S. 960). The foreign aid bill includes a number of programs which I heartily support such as development aid, food aid, financial assistance to Israel, and humanitarian help. Unfortunately, this report continues a disturbing trend toward increasing U.S. military aid and CIA covert operations.

The conference report contains some needed improvements in the Food-for-Peace Program, including increased shipping levels for title II donations and emphasis on multiyear programs with co-ops and private voluntary organizations like CARE and Catholic Relief Services. The report earmarks $52 million for UNICEF's innovative programs which have the potential of cutting in half the 40,000 children who die each day from readily-treatable problems like dehydration. The conferees would also provide $50 million a year for replenishing the International Fund for Agricultural Development and moving ahead on a special project to revive Africa's sagging farm production. Funds are also designated to help Israel, our key strategic ally in the Middle East, to cope with its current economic crisis.

Regrettably, this report pumps up the military aid accounts again. In total, the agreement allows $200 million more in military aid than the House passed bill, and over $300 million more than in 1985. In one case, the compromise permitted an $805 million level for the Military Assistance Program [MAP], which is over seven times its 1981 level. The report also knocks out vital restrictions on U.S. military aid around the world. The conferees piled on another $45 million in arms aid for the Philippines at a time of mounting unrest in that country. We are also asked to scrub a needed ban on military aid to the rebels in Angola, which undermines any serious attempt to negotiate peace in southern Africa. The agreement further takes out a House restriction on advanced arms sales to Jordan, which has shown scant interest in a real peace pact for the Middle East. I am most disturbed by the $27 million earmarked for the Nicaraguan Contras, a clear sign that we are bent on a military—not a diplomatic—course in Central America.

Consequently, I must oppose this report on the grounds that it strips away needed safeguards against misguided military aid, that it shortchanges humanitarian aid to pay for more arms aid, and that it fails the budget test by increasing foreign aid by adding $136 million in foreign aid above the 1985 level. In a word, this is the wrong kind of foreign aid for building the right kind of foreign policy.●

● Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Speaker, the conference report on S. 960, the Foreign Assistance Act authorizations bill for 1986, deserves the support of those of us who want to counter terrorism, reduce drug trafficking, and enhance our Nation's ability to conduct foreign affairs.

In the past, I've not supported foreign aid bills because they've just thrown more money at the problem. But this measure moves us away from that. First, it calls for a freeze on the level of spending. That is a commendable effort toward holding down the deficit. And it is in keeping with my strong support for an across-the-board freeze on all Federal spending.

Second, the conference report takes a strong stand against repressive regimes around the world which engage in press censorship, commit outrageous atrocities against their own peoples, and repress basic human rights.

Finally, the bill contains provisions designed to counter international terrorism and reduce illicit narcotics traffic.

Shocking events throughout the world underscore the fact that we in America are not isolated from the world's troubled spots, nor, as we've witnessed in recent terrorist acts, can we pretend to be apart from these problems.

This measure gives our country more tools to shake loose the terrorists grip' on the world and to help those peoples who strive for the freedom and democracy that we cherish.

I commend the conferees for their work in reaching this agreement. The overwhelming, bipartisan support it has received is a tribute to their efforts.●

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device and there were—yeas 262, nays 161, not voting 10, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report on S. 960 just agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT OF THE HOUSE FROM THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1985, OR FRIDAY, AUGUST 2, 1985, TO WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1985, AND ADJOURNMENT OF THE SENATE FROM THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1985, OR FRIDAY, AUGUST 2, 1985, UNTIL WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 4, 1985, OR MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1985

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, I have at the desk a privileged concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 179) and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

H. CON. RES. 179

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the House adjourns on Thursday, August 1, 1985, or on Friday, August 2, 1985, pursuant to a motion made by the Majority Leader, or his designee, in accordance with this resolution, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Wednesday, September 4, 1985, or until 12 o'clock meridian on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this concurrent resolution, whichever occurs first; and that when the Senate adjourns on Thursday, August 1, 1985, or on Friday, August 2, 1985, pursuant to a motion made by the Majority Leader in accordance with this resolution, it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Wednesday, September 4, 1985, or until 12 o'clock meridian on Monday, September 9, 1985, pursuant to a motion made by the Majority Leader, or until 12 o'clock meridian on the second day after Members are notified to reassemble pursuant to section 2 of this concurrent resolution whichever occurs first.

SEC. 2. The Speaker of the House and the Majority Leader of the Senate, acting jointly after consultation with the Minority Leader of the House and the Minority Leader of the Senate, shall notify the Members of the House and the Senate, respectively, to reassemble whenever, in their opinion, the public interest shall warrant it.

The SPEAKER. Pursuant to Public Law 91-510, the vote on this concurrent resolution must be taken by the yeas and nays. Those in favor will vote "yea"; those opposed will vote "nay."

There is no debate on this issue. The vote will be taken by electronic device.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 230, nays 192, not voting 11, as follows:

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska, Mrs. LLOYD, and Messrs. WORTLEY, CARR, and LUJAN changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BOULTER. Mr. Speaker, I was inadvertently detained for the vote on House Concurrent Resolution 179, the adjournment resolution because I was meeting with a group of my constituents downtown about a Federal Energy Regulatory Commission ruling which is very important to the Panhandle of Texas. Had I been present, I would have voted "nay" in opposition to the adjournment resolution.

ACCURACY IN HOUSE PROCEEDINGS RESOLUTION

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on House Administration, I call up House Resolution 230 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 230

Resolved, That this resolution may be cited as the "Accuracy in House Proceedings Resolution".

SEC. 2. The Joint Committee on Printing is hereby requested to adopt the following rule as part of the House Supplement to Laws and Rules for Publication of the Congressional Record:

"7. Notwithstanding any other rule or joint rule relating to the publication of the Congressional Record, for the remainder of the first session of the Ninety-ninth Congress, the Congressional Record shall contain a substantially verbatim account of remarks actually spoken during the proceedings of the House, subject to such technical, grammatical, and typographical corrections as may be authorized by the Member delivering the remarks involved. The substantially verbatim account shall be clearly distinguishable by different typeface from any remarks not actually spoken but inserted under permission to extend remarks.".

SEC. 3. The Joint Committee on Printing is requested to monitor the operation of the special rule provided for by section 2 of this resolution and report its findings to the Committee on House Administration no later than December 31, 1985. The Committee on House Administration should report to the House as soon as practicable thereafter its findings and recommendation as to whether such rule should be continued.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DARDEN). The gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield one-half hour to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, pursuant to rule III of the laws and rules for the publication of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD promulgated by the Joint Committee on Printing, a bullet symbol is presently used to distinguish between words spoken on the floor by Members and words submitted, but not actually spoken. According to the rule, the so-called bullet, a large black dot, is placed at the beginning and the end of speeches, remarks, and other materials which are submitted by Members for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, but no part of which was spoken on the floor.

Although this rule was designed to aid in distinguishing between spoken and nonspoken words, under the rule a member may rise and speak as little as one sentence of a prepared statement. When the remainder of the text is submitted to the official reporter under leave to revise and extend remarks, the bullet symbol is not used because rule III requires the bullet only when no part of the statement is spoken on the floor.

In response to this practice, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] introduced House Resolution 163 calling for a review of the bulleting procedure. Of specific concern was a debate printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on May 1, 1985, wherein the bullet symbol did not set off a Member's remarks which appeared not to have been spoken on the floor, while in the same colloquy in other remarks had a bullet symbol directly applied.

After extensive review by the Subcommittee on Procurement and Printing and the Committee on House Administration, the resolution now before us proposes to address these concerns raised by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT].

We are considering this resolution, Mr. Speaker, entitled "Accuracy in House Proceedings," wherein it is intended first that Members be made more aware of the existing rules, and second, that a closer adherence to the rules should be strongly encouraged, because the entire process is self-policing by Members.

To accomplish this, this resolution will effectively eliminate the bullet symbol in the House portion of the RECORD for a trial period, which trial period will end at the conclusion of this session of Congress. At the beginning of the next session of Congress at the end of this year, the Committee on House Administration will report its findings and recommendations to the House. The trial period will drop the use of the bullet and substitute a different typeface in the RECORD for those remarks that are inserted or are additional remarks of Members. These remarks will appear in a so-called Century bold type, which is slightly smaller than the eight-point typeface that is issued by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and somewhat darker.

The purpose of such a change is to distinguish more clearly remarks not actually spoken on the floor under extensions or under leave to extend.

Members shall continue to have the right to revise original copy without having the alternative typeface applied to their revisions, but they should continue to confine their revisions to technical, grammatical, and typographical changes, as is now the practice.

When we report at the end of the first session of Congress, the House will have an opportunity to further consider any changes that it wishes to undertake to this rule.

I wish to reemphasize that the primary responsibility for ensuring the observance of the rules' requirements shall rest, as it does now, on each individual Member, although any clear deviations from the rule or its guidelines may be informally called to the attention of the Member.

I want to compliment the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] for bringing this matter to the attention of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished minority whip, the originator of this legislation, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT].

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the chairmen and ranking Republicans on the House Administration Committee and its Procurement and Printing Subcommittee on their cooperation and efforts in developing this proposal and bringing it to the floor. I particularly want to pay tribute to the distinguished majority whip and chairman of the Subcommittee on Printing [Mr. FOLEY] for sponsoring this resolution with me and for his patience and persistence in working out guidelines which I think will be acceptable to all parties concerned. The gentleman has taken care to consult closely with the Official Reporters, Government Printing Office, the Parliamentarian's Office and others. He has worked closely with me and other Republican Members on a bipartisan basis in seeing this project through. I think this effort is an example of how this House can work in harmony for the improvement of this institution.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 230, which calls for a more accurate account of House proceedings in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, is actually the culmination of work begun over 15 years ago by our late colleague from Wisconsin, Bill Steiger.

It was 15 years ago the Monday, on July 29, 1970, that Congressman Steiger offered an amendment to the Legislative Reorganization Act that was substantially identical to the rule before us today. Although that initial effort lost on a voice vote, Congressman Steiger persisted with his crusade for CONGRESSIONAL RECORD reform over the next decade, right up to his untimely death in December 1978, at the age of 40. Just 9 months prior to his death, he won a partial victory when the Joint Committee on Printing instituted the present "bulleting" procedure whereby a dot appears by remarks where no part of them were actually delivered.

While Congressman Steiger heralded the advent of the bullet as an important first step, he vowed to continue with his efforts until all unspoken remarks were distinguishable from remarks actually delivered.

I think it's appropriate to recall Bill Steiger's pioneer efforts on behalf of CONGRESSIONAL RECORD reform as we consider this resolution today. If anything, the case for RECORD reform is even more compelling now than it was then. It wasn't until 2 months after Congressman's Steiger's death that we began publicly televising House proceedings. Some 20 million C-SPAN viewers know what is really said on this floor. Why should we maintain a fictional CONGRESSIONAL RECORD when we now have a factual electronic record that tells it like it is rather than how we wish we had said it? Why shouldn't we begin living up to the 1968 law that says the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD "shall be substantially a verbatim report of proceedings?"

Mr. Speaker, that's what this proposed rule is all about: Making our CONGRESSIONAL RECORD just that, a true, honest, and accurate record of our proceedings. This rule will replace the present bullet symbol and in its place require that remarks not actually delivered be in different typeface. Whereas Members may now speak only a few words or sentences of their speeches, and the entire speech will appear in the RECORD as if it were actually delivered, that is, without a bullet, under this rule, the part spoken will be in one typeface and the part not spoken in another. This will help insure compliance with the 1968 law requiring that our RECORD be substantially verbatim.

Mr. Speaker, I know there are some concerns that this might cause more Members to deliver their entire speeches. We have purposely proposed this as a temporary test, with close monitoring and evaluation, before making it a permanent rule. But I don't think this will result in more and longer speeches. More people watch us on TV than read the RECORD. If Members really wanted the folks back home to think they acutally delivered all of their speeches, they'd already be giving that whole speech for the benefit of the TV viewers. I think most Members are more concerned about being on the record on most issues than they are about being on the tube all the time. By the same token, they are more concerned about being on the record than they are in what kind of typeface their views appear in.

Let's face it, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is not really one of your more popularly read periodicals back in the district. I don't think this is going to change our floor behavior that radically. But, we do have the safeguard here of a temporary, pilot test of the new rule, and a definite sunset date. Let's give it a chance and base our final judgment on actual experience rather than imagined problems. I think we owe an honest RECORD to ourselves, our citizens, and to posterity. Let's set the RECORD straight. Vote for this resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I include at this point in the RECORD a Congressional Research Service report by Roger Davidson and Thomas Kephart entitled, "Representative William Steiger's Advocacy of Congressional Record Reform."

REPRESENTATIVE WILLIAM A. STEIGER'S ADVOCACY OF CONGRESSIONAL RECORD REFORM

(By Roger H. Davidson, Senior Specialist, and Thomas Kephart, Research Assistant, American National Government Division, Congressional Research Service)

First elected to Congress in 1966, William A. Steiger represented the Sixth District of Wisconsin until his untimely death in December 1978, just after he was reelected to a seventh term. Steiger respected the House as an institution and soon became a leading advocate of congressional reform measures. He was one of a bipartisan group of Members who succeeded in strengthening the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 through a series of floor amendments in the House. Later, he was an active member of a panel that recommended a comprehensive reorganization of the House Committee System—the Select Committee on Committees (the Bolling-Martin Committee) during the 93rd Congress.

Steiger's role as a proponent of reforming the Congressional Record began in 1970. On July 29 of that year, he offered an amendment on this subject to H.R. 17654—the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970. As he explained the amendment's three provisions:

"One, it says that the body of the Record shall contain an accurate and verbatim account of the remarks actually delivered on the floor . . . Two, it says extensions and revisions of remarks delivered on the floor shall be limited to the correction of grammatical and typographical errors and in no event shall such corrections make any change in the meaning, content, or substance of such remarks. Number three is: Members shall be entitled to make insertions in the Congressional Record of remarks not actually delivered, but such insertions shall appear in a distinctly different type face from that used for the verbatim remarks."[1]

Steiger's initial effort was rejected by voice vote. Only one colleague, Representative Robert Eckhardt, D-Texas, rose to support it. During debate on Steiger's amendment, it was suggested that rather than attempting to amend the Rules of the House, he plead his case to the Joint Committee on Printing. Along with Representatives Eckhardt, Thomas Rees, D-California, John Rhodes, R-Arizona, and Louis Wyman, R-New Hampshire, Steiger wrote to the Joint Committee urging it to "undertake a more thorough analysis of this problem." The Joint Committee's Staff Director replied that such changes would delay publication of the Record and noted the lack of interest Committee members had shown in such a proposal. Steiger persisted over the following years, occasionally calling the House's attention to this issue during the 92nd and 93rd Congresses.

In 1975, during the 94th Congress, Steiger introduced five resolutions, (H. Res. 568, 569, 570, 581, 630) to amend the Rules of the House to make the Congressional Record a more accurate reflection of chamber proceedings. Though these measures differed in details, they all specified that the Record should constitute a "verbatim account" of floor proceedings. Steiger stepped up his efforts through occasional addresses to the chamber and frequent insertions of articles advocating reform of the Record. Included among these was a 1958 article authored by the man cited by Steiger as the original forceful advocate of Record reform. Senator Richard Neuberger, D-Oregon. Steiger so admired Neuberger's statement that he inserted it in the Record annually. By July 1975, Steiger's efforts had attracted the attention and support of many colleagues, with one resolution gaining 51 co-sponsors.

The need for clarity of legislative history was a prime motivation for Members backing Steiger initiatives. Steiger highlighted this point in a one-minute speech he delivered July 31, 1975:

"I have been introducing into the Record pertinent comments on this issue by authorities on the congressional process. Many of these items have pointed out the danger of misinterpretation of legislative intent because of revisions and extensions. Avoiding this danger is the primary purpose of the above resolution . . . my chief concern is that we may see a return of the practice whereby the judicial branch of our government ignores the record of debate when considering the intent of Congress.

"The history of judicial interpretation of legislation during the late 19th century was one of judge-made law and judicial veto . . .

"When the meaning of a statute could be alleged to be vague or ambiguous, as it sometimes was because of poor draftsmanship, judge-made law was the result. It was quite a number of years before courts looked at the record of our deliberations in determining legislative intent." [2]

In a separate address on June 18, 1976, Steiger addressed the issue of public confidence in Congress:

"Mr. Speaker, confidence in Congress on the part of the American people is at a perilously low level. It is clear that we must look carefully at our rules and procedures to determine what can be done to restore the public's trust in us and in Congress as an institution.

"My firm belief is that a cornerstone of this effort must be reform of the Congressional Record. We cannot permit wholesale changes in speeches made by Members, insertions of statements never made, and other alterations that destroy the integrity of the Congressional Record and distort congressional intent as reflected in debate." [3]

Steiger introduced nine resolutions on this subject during the first Session of the 95th Congress, in 1977. (H. Res. 284, 323, 324, 325, 326, 410, 479, 549, 779). During the 95th Congress, Steiger's effort began to bear fruit. Effective March 1, 1978, the Laws and Rules for publication of the Congressional Record were "amended to identify statements or insertions in the Record where no part of them was spoken."

In a February 22, 1978, one-minute speech, Steiger commented on the "bulleting" procedure:

"We have come a long way since the House defeated, by voice vote, my proposed amendment to the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 calling for clearly distinguishing unspoken remarks in the Record.

"It remains my firm conviction, though, that all unspoken remarks should be set off from what is actually said on the floor. Bulleting of wholly inserted statements is excellent, but we have not gone far enough when a Member can, by speaking as little as one sentence, make two pages of inserted material appear to have been delivered." [4]

On the occasion of the first bulleted record, March 1, 1978, Steiger was recognized for thirty minutes on the subject:

"Mr. Speaker, it is an historic thing we are doing today. The reputation of one of the most dishonest and mistrusted publications in the world may yet be saved. The world will little note what we say, but after today, it will have a better idea of what we did not say on the floor of the House and Senate . . .

"My strong feeling is that what happens today must be only the first step toward returning the Record to its legal definition as substantially a verbatim report of proceedings of the House and Senate! I remain firmly convinced that all unspoken remarks should be designated as such . . .

"There is considerable support in the House for this more far-reaching change. More than a third of the House has cosponsored my resolution to bullet all unuttered remarks. This is double the number of cosponsors in the 94th Congress and a marked change from 1970, when my proposed amendment to the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 was defeated by voice vote . . .

"Because so many unmade speeches dot the Record, it is steadily declining in importance as a documentation of legislative history . . . When an unstated argument has been printed without rebuttal, legislative intent can be clouded forever . . .

"Today's action is one of the most meaningful reforms to be instituted in my time in Congress. Until now, all that appeared in the Record was suspect because of those portions that had been inserted or that were subject to significant changes. Today we acknowledge that this was not right and we act to make the Record more honest. . .

"There is no question that bulleting of remarks will substantially change the way we are perceived. That is why I will continue to push for bulleting of all unspoken remarks. The experience of these ensuing months, I am sure, will allay any remaining fears and pave the way for this full time." [5]

The remarks Steiger delivered March 1, 1978, proved to be his final recorded views on the subject of reform of the Congressional Record to what he believed to be its original purpose. His advocacy of this cause would undoubtedly have continued, but for a fatal heart attack in December 1978. Steiger is remembered for many accomplishments, substantive as well as procedural, during his 12 years in this body. However, as the House contemplates further steps in the direction of an accurate Congressional Record, it is fitting to recall his consistent championship of this issue.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time. I appreciate the work that went into this and all of the people that brought this forward. I think it is a big step in the right direction of cleaning up a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that has been badly distorted in recent years.

But let me understand, do I understand this is not anything that will change the revise and extend procedure that allows Members to change their own remarks that are put into the RECORD, despite the fact that we have had instances where there have been major substantive changes done during the revise and extend by individual Members?

Mr. FRENZEL. I would tell the gentleman that no Member will be denied a chance to revise and extend his or her remarks, if unanimous consent is received.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would yield further, I appreciate the answer. In other words, this goes a long way toward correcting the problem of people inserting the material in the RECORD that then appears as though it is a speech?

Mr. FRENZEL. That is correct.

Mr. WALKER. But we are not with this particular action solving the problem of people who use the revise and extend procedure to dramatically change the remarks they made on the floor; is that correct?

Mr. FRENZEL. Those remarks, if they are a dramatic change, will be in a different sized type, I would tell the gentleman, so that they will stand out as being different from the material delivered on the floor.

Mr. WALKER. Even if it is a case where they are revising and extending their original, where they have gone through and have revised and extended their original text remarks, is that correct?

Mr. FRENZEL. That is correct. If they are merely technical, misspellings, periods, split infinitives, it will not be shown. If it is a change of substance, it will be shown.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman and I think that is an important change.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, in the interest of clarity, I think it also should be stated to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] that this is a matter which Members are expected to police themselves. We are not going to call on the Government Printing Office or the reporters to edit every Member's remarks to determine whether there was a substantial difference between the remarks that the Member delivered on the floor and what is extended in the RECORD.

If it is conceded that there are substantial additional nondelivered remarks, then those would be in the dark typeface. But if someone changes a sentence in the middle of his spoken remarks and does not otherwise indicate it, they will probably—we do not have any system for editing. Members are going to be asked to observe the spirit of the resolution, but we are not setting up in our arrangement here an editorial board to go through every Member's spoken words.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, and I concur in his statement.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield further to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, then that confuses me, because the problem becomes that that original transcript is between the Member and the reporter. I mean, there is no way of changing that.

Mr. FRENZEL. That is correct.

Mr. WALKER. So if I gather from what the gentleman is telling us then, if a Member does make substantive changes, it is between him and his conscience, and the rules, but we might not find that those substantive changes ended up being reflected.

Mr. FRENZEL. I will tell the gentleman that we are going to rely on the Members to do the biggest part of the job. If you slip in an additional phrase or an additional sentence, you may get away with it. If you stick in a whole new paragraph, that will undoubtedly appear in a different-sized print.

We would ask all Members, and we say so in this debate, that if you make a change that is important, you should note it and so the printer can pick it up. If you do not, you will probably get away with it for a while, until we catch it.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, no one has discussed the additional cost. It appears obvious that if we are going to have to set up a system of different type running together in a statement that it is going to give an additional cost to the printing of this CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on a daily basis, extra time, singling it out.

What will be the additional cost?

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Washington for his normally brilliant response to that question.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I will tell the gentleman, I will say that we are informed that it is not a very heavy expense to do that. Modern printing mechanisms can key into the different type face very quickly, so there is no significant additional costs we are informed.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I want to express my thanks for the teamwork approach, and in the congratulations that have been given here. This resolution arose out of the perhaps most decisive matter that has come before this Congress in my time here.

The committee, headed by the gentleman from Illinois, Chairman ANNUNZIO, and the gentleman from Washington, Chairman FOLEY, have handled this in a businesslike way that has been satisfactory and, in fact, has been a great pleasure to both parties.

Finally, I want to congratulate our Mr. GINGRICH who is the ranking member on the subcommittee for his cooperation and the splendid way that he performed.

As a postscript, I must echo the words of the distinguished minority whip about our beloved ex-colleague, Bill Steiger, who started this whole process more than 15 years ago, and whose early spade work on this subject started us moving toward the improvement we are passing today. I have introduced into the committee record a Library of Congress paper on Bill Steiger's tireless and effective efforts to reform and improve the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

I hope this privileged resolution is promptly passed.

I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ANNUNZIO], the chairman of the Committee on House Administration.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to extend my congratulations to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], the gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY], and to all of the members of the House Administration Committee for the excellent cooperation in bringing this resolution to the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to take this opportunity to indicate how important the work of the Subcommittee on Procurement and Printing is. Chairman FOLEY has worked extensively with both the majority and minority members of the subcommittee and full committee in bringing this resolution to the floor. There were many potential obstacles, but due to the efforts of Chairman FOLEY, Mr. LOTT, and the other members of the Committee on House Administration, we have been able to move this proposal forward.

I believe this kind of cooperative undertaking is absolutely essential if the House of Representatives is to effectively examine its practices and procedures. Both Members of the majority and Members of the minority, in fact all Members, have an opportunity to contribute their ideas and expertise to the improvement of the House. I would urge each Member, irrespective of party, to work cooperatively toward such improvements and wish once again to congratulate Chairman FOLEY, Mr. LOTT, and all of the members of the Committee on House Administration for their efforts in improving the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

At the conclusion of the test period, I look forward to the continued cooperation of the membership in evaluating the test and making such changes as may be justified.

I yield back the balance of my time.

□ 1210

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution. The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (H.R. 2068) "An act to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Department of State, the U.S. Information Agency, the Board for International Broadcasting, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 410. An act to repeal the Commercial and Apartment Conservation Service, and for other purposes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report on H.R. 2577, the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1985, and amendments thereto in disagreement, and that they may include extraneous material.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 2577, SUPPLEMENTAL APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1985

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the order of the House of July 29, 1985, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 2577) making supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, and for other purposes, and I ask unanimous consent that such conference report and all amendments in disagreement be considered as having been read.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of July 2, 1985.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, may I say to my colleagues that in my experience here this supplemental appropriations bill has been one of the most difficult measures with which I have had to deal. Yet I do not know of anything that is more vital than this supplemental bill and its contents. I say to my colleagues no one here is stronger for authorization, in each and every case.

What we have here is a supplemental appropriation bill made necessary in part because so much of it has not been authorized. We have been unable to authorize for a variety of reasons. But in connection with some of it, it is because for 15 years, all of us working together, have been unable to get an authorization for domestic public works.

I would like for you to understand that if you are worried about the deficit you had better first look after your country because only through development and protection of our country's resources can we meet the deficit; if you are worried about the debt, you had better go along with us on this measure providing for public works because it is our country we are going to have to look to if we meet our problems. Our rivers and harbors, soil conservation, erosion, all the things that go to make up the real wealth of our country are involved here today.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I appreciate your confidence in having me as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. But I also promise you that we did not delay this bill. We waited to find out what the 341 amendments on the Senate side meant. We got them to recede on over 100 amendments.

We have tried to help our friends on the authorizing committees to get their bills up and through the House. They are our friends and I do not know of any group which has cooperated more since I have been in Congress than the members of the legislative Committee on Public Works.

We have delayed nothing intentionally. We have agreed every time they have asked us when we could, but there were times when they could not. So let me repeat again, whatever our financial situation, and it is bad, whatever our debt situation, and it is bad, whatever our deficit, we had better look after our own country because that is what it all depends upon. This bill is directed that way.

There are two ways to serve in Congress. One is to record your views. If that is all you are going to do you might as well stay at home and write letters to the editor. The other way is to try to do something about it. I am proud of the fact that when it was not popular, I voted to bail out New York City because it is one of our major cities. I was right about it.

I want you to know that I also voted for the Chrysler loan because if you get big businesses going broke it is likely to become a snowball, it will grow in size as it goes down. I want you to know in this bill here my viewpoint has been national in scope, because we do represent the country as well as our districts.

So contrary to what you read again the delay here in bringing it up was at the instance of the leadership, but when we brought it up we got to go just as fast as we could.

This bill is below the 1985 budget resolution by $900 million-some-odd. So we are within the limits set by our budget.

Harbors all over this country are involved; floor control all over this country is involved; so I hope you will vote with us for the bill before us.

May I say again we have included projects that in our opinion were justified, about half of which are not authorized. Why? They are supported by the legislative committees and the legislative committees, with all due deference to their great ability and my friendship with them, for 15 years they have been unable to get an authorization. I say it is time we all have to join and help them.

We have worked with our colleagues who head those two committees so we would be sure to include what they thought should be included. Why? Because for 15 years they have been unable to get a bill into law. I say we are not encroaching on anybody. We invited the leaders, we caucused with them, we asked them for their support. If you vote to eliminate this provision of the conference report, judging by the past, you are voting to eliminate your projects.

I was disappointed when we first brought this bill before you, we lost 203–202 on the unauthorized projects.

So let me say again this is the most important thing we will do. If for one reason or another our friends on the other side or the White House are going to keep us from authorizing for 15 years, then it is time we use every vehicle they have in mind.

So I repeat again in detail what we are up against. Have you ever heard in your experience here of the Senate adding 341 amendments to a bill? That is what we face, 341 where we felt we should read them and understand them. I guess all of you have a whole lot of mail about domestic measures but do you know that OMB sent down a request for $2,250,000,000 in this supplement for foreign aid for the remaining 2 months? And I have not had a letter opposing this. I have not read an editorial against it. That was taken for granted. But we struggle and we groan and we fight each other when we start looking after these essential projects for our own country.

It is time my friends that we work together. I deplore a situation when my good friends on the Public Works Committee with whom I am very close, who have helped me in every way they could, helped you, cannot get their bill through the Congress and enacted into law.

If you look at what we have provided in foreign aid, if you look at what we are spending in military aid, if you look at our debt, you are bound to realize it is high time we look to our own country to which we have to look if these things are going to be handled.

I yield to my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. DE LA GARZA].

Mr. DE LA GARZA. I appreciate my chairman yielding, and I want to add my commendation to the chairman and the ranking minority member, and all members of the conference for their work in this supplemental, but specifically, and especially in Agriculture and the replenishing the funds for the Commodity Credit Corporation. which is in trouble and needs emergency action.

I know of the previous actions of the chairman, and I want to express my appreciation to the chairman and to the members of the conference.

Mr. WHITTEN. I thank the gentleman. I appreciate the fine job he does, and his statement.

I am going to discuss some of the details of this bill, I hope it will not be in funny print.

Mr. Speaker, the conference report on the fiscal year 1985 supplemental which is now before the House provides funding which is seriously needed for nearly all departments and agencies of the Government.

This conference report is the product of a lot of hard work and diligent effort on the part of many Members of the House. The Appropriations Committee, through its subcommittees, began work on this bill back in April.

We delayed bringing this bill to the House at the request of the leadership so that there would be some time to deal with the Contra issue. But finally, on June 12, the bill passed the House.

When the bill reached the Senate, a tremendous number of amendments was added—some 341—or over 3 for each Senator.

We began work in conference on Monday of last week, and in three meetings over 5 days, we completed the conference last Friday. The conference report was filed on Monday and now is before the House for consideration.

Mr. Speaker, let me express my thanks to all those who participated in resolving this matter—both on the Appropriations Committees and on the various authorizing committees with which we worked.

But let me particularly thank the ranking minority member, SILVIO CONTE, and the subcommittee chairmen and ranking minority members—including EDDIE BOLAND, BILL NATCHER, NEAL SMITH, JOE ADDABBO, SID YATES, DAVE OBEY, ED ROYBAL, GEORGE O'BRIEN, JOE MCDADE, RALPH REGULA, JACK KEMP, TOM BEVILL, BILL LEHMAN, JULIAN DIXON, VIC FAZIO, JOHN MYERS, and LARRY COUGHLIN.

Funds in the conference report total $13,024,352,536, and touch just about every branch of Government; mainly because it is this annual supplemental bill which contains the mandatory Federal cost-of-living adjustment. Approximately 46 percent of this bill is classified as mandatory under existing law.

The bill is $920,395,000 below the Senate bill and is below the budget resolution.

On the Contra-Nicaragua issue, there was, of course, a great deal of discussion. Finally, the House prevailed and insisted on its position which is contained in the conference report.

Some of the other highlights of the conference report are the following:

CHAPTER I—AGRICULTURE

Mr. Speaker, for the Agriculture chapter the conference agreement includes $2,935,790,000 for restoration of net realized losses of the Commodity Credit Corporation; $1 billion was provided in the Urgent Supplemental (H.J. Res. 342) which we enacted into law July 24 to meet the emergency. The total of $3.9 billion is the same as the amount in the budget request recommended for fiscal year 1986. Our committee had the foresight to include these funds in the supplemental in order that they would be available during fiscal year 1985. On July 17 the Secretary of Agriculture notified the Congress that CCC was terminating disbursements. On July 18 the House passed an Urgent Supplemental, which I had introduced on July 15, and the Senate passed it the next day and it went to the White House that afternoon. The President signed it into law (Public Law 99-71) on the morning of July 24 and CCC immediately resumed operations.

The conference agreement also provides $163 million for the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, the same amount as the budget request and an estimated amount of funds that will be required to get the Corporation through the balance of this fiscal year.

A very important item included in the conference agreement is $500,000 as proposed by the House for a study and determination of the impact on the farmer of embargoes and the failure to offer his products for sale competitively in world markets over the last decade. In carrying out this study, we will expect the Department to obtain the services of individuals with national standing in the field of economic research in order that we have the very best results from the study.

The conference agreement also includes $318,856,000 for the Food Stamp Program, the same as the budget request. These additional funds are required due to the enactment of Public Law 98-473 last October 12, which increased the food stamp benefits for all household sizes for 11 months of fiscal year 1985. This change in the law was enacted after the passage of the fiscal year 1985 appropriation bill and, therefore, necessitated supplemental funding in the recommended amount.

For the Temporary Emergency Food Assistance Program the conference agreement provides $7 million, which will be available for the remainder of this fiscal year and the first 6 months of fiscal year 1986. These additional funds should be adequate to meet the needs for those States which have run out of money or are having to scale back their program due to a shortage of funds.

An issue of great importance to many of our western colleagues, Mr. Speaker, is funding for the Grasshopper Control Program. In the House bill we provided $9 million, the same as the budget request. The Senate increased the amount to $19 million which we agreed to in conference. While we did not receive an official budget request for the additional $10 million, the Secretary of Agriculture did advise the conferees that the administration supported the full $19 million for this program.

The conference agreement also includes two provisions related to the Agricultural Stabilization and Conservation Service. The first prohibits that agency from closing or relocating any of their offices, but does allow the Department to conduct a study of their operations and to report to the Congress prior to taking any action. The second provision allows the Commodity Credit Corporation to continue to lease office and other space for ASCS and other USDA agencies when they share space with ASCS.

In the area of food programs, the conferees agreed on two provisions. The first allows the continuation of the national Commodity Processing Program through June 30, 1986. The second provision provides for the phaseout of the pilot cash in lieu of commodities study effective December 31, 1985. The study has now been completed, and there is no longer a need to continue this program through provisions of the Appropriation Act.

I would also mention, Mr. Speaker, that in the bill we have provided $3,500,000 for the warmwater aquaculture facility which includes $700,000 that was made available in the fiscal year 1985 Appropriation Act. This expansion of aquaculture research will make a major contribution to the field of warmwater aquaculture, and I am pleased to say that it will be matched by an equal amount of non-Federal funds.

Mr. Speaker, there were 40 Senate amendments to the Agriculture chapter, and I am pleased to say that we were able to resolve these amendments in conference. I would also like to thank our ranking minority member on the subcommittee, the gentlelady from Nebraska [Mrs. SMITH], who does a fine job for her constituents and everyone else engaged in agriculture.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi has consumed 9 minutes.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the bill passed the House on June 12, and passed the Senate on June 20 with 341 amendments. The Senate appointed conferees on June 20, the House appointed conferees on July 16, and the conferees reported on Monday of this week, July 29.

The conferees have reported 151 amendments in technical disagreement, and recommend that on 91 of these amendments the House recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate. The chairman will ask unanimous consent to consider these 91 amendments en bloc, and I hope that the House will agree to that request.

The total amount of new budget authority in the bill is $13 billion, which is $405 million under the House bill, $920 million under the Senate bill, $139 million over the administration's budget request, and $913 million under the total for new budget authority for fiscal 1985 in the House-passed budget resolution.

The bill is acceptable to the administration, and I can recommend the bill as a whole to my colleagues, even though I disagree with some portions of the bill.

However, in any bill which totals $13 billion, and where the conferees had to agree or disagree on 341 amendments, there will be individual items where Members cannot agree.

While I cannot review the entire bill, I will describe for my colleagues the major items, and the major points of disagreement with the administration.

In this bill, $9.9 billion, or 75 percent of the total, is in 10 programs where we have provided the exact amount of the budget estimate, and which includes Federal crop insurance, food stamps, CCC, the international banks, funds for Israel, Egypt, and Jordan, veterans' benefits, retired Federal employees, and a payment to the Social Security trust fund for military service credits.

We cut $1.2 billion from the supplemental request for defense pay costs and initiated rescissions of $37.7 million, and we used those savings to finance $763 million in unbudgeted pay supplementals, and $1 billion in unbudgeted discretionary program supplementals.

The pay supplementals that we received from the administration required that DOD absorb only 26 percent of its additional pay costs, while all other agencies had to absorb 72 percent. I think those priorities were wrong, and the House and the Senate have agreed.

By cutting $1.2 billion from DOD pay, and adding $173 million for other agencies, we provide that both DOD and the civilian agencies absorb 56 percent of their additional pay costs. I think those priorities are right, and deserve your support.

The bill as reported to the House included $171 million for 66 new starts. After a point of order and an amendment, the bill as passed the House contained $71 million for 35 new starts. The bill now contains $63 million for 45 new starts and language on cost-sharing which is acceptable to the administration.

The bill includes the McDade amendment providing humanitarian aid to the Contras, which cannot be administered by the CIA or the DOD, and which is subject to the restrictions of the Boland amendment.

The bill includes an additional $168.6 million to cover the revenue forgone by the Postal Service due to volume increases and the rate increases implemented in February of this year.

The bill also includes an additional $55.5 million for guaranteed student loans, which is required under current law.

The bill includes an additional $289 milion for Pell grants, which is the amount required to continue assistance with a maximum award of $2,100 and a cost of attendance limit of 60 percent as provided by current law.

The bill includes an additional $35.6 million for foster care and adoption assistance, which is the amount required under current law.

The bill includes an additional $45 million for the Bureau of Land Management to cover funds already borrowed and spent for emergency firefighting costs.

To sum up, most of the program supplementals are required under existing law. Our proposed pay supplementals are, frankly, more fair I think, and equitable than those recommended by the administration.

Each Member must make his or her own judgment, but for my part, I intend to vote for this conference report.

CHAPTER I—AGRICULTURE, RURAL DEVELOPMENT AND RELATED AGENCIES

For chapter I of title I, the conferees recommend $3.409 billion in new budget authority. This total, including $2.935 billion to reimburse the Commodity Credit Corporation for net realized losses, represents a decrease of $984.35 million from House-passed levels, a decrease of $995.797 million from Senate-passed levels, and an increase of $32.7 million over the administration's request and its estimate of need for CCC reimbursements.

When taking into account the $1 billion urgent supplemental for CCC reimbursements, as passed the House on July 18, and enacted into law on July 24 (Public Law 99-71), however, our conference agreement more accurately represents an increase of $15.65 million over the House-passed levels, and $4.203 million over the Senate-passed levels.

Of the 37 program-related Senate amendments, the managers on the part of the Senate have agreed to recede on 13. These include proposed Deficit Reduction Act rescissions for the Office of the Secretary ($69,000), the Agricultural Marketing Service ($150,000), the Rural Electrification Administration ($100,000), the Soil Conservation Service ($2,000,000) and the Food Stamp Program ($5,000,000).

In addition the Senate conferees have agreed to recede on various proposed requirements for the conduct of an Economic Research Service study, and they have agreed to adopt the House language concerning the prohibition on closures or relocations of State and county offices of the Agricultural Conservation and Stabilization Service. With regard to these ASCS prohibitions, the conferees have included report language emphasizing that any studies on improvements in program management, program delivery and common support activities are to be reported to the Congress. As a manager on the part of the House, it is my intention to carefully review any such study as reported prior to the implementation of policy or program changes as recommended within.

The House conferees have agreed to recede on two provisions; the first adopts the Senate language on Farmers Home Administration loan programs, and requires FmHA to set loan interest rates at the lower of the rate in effect at either the time of loan approval or loan closing; the second deletes the House language regarding the availability of fiscal year 1985 funds for the Feeding Program for Women, Infants and Children. Since the President submitted an official budget request for the supplemental WIC funds on June 7, 1985, the full $1.5 billion appropriated in fiscal year 1985 has been made available, making further congressional action in this important area unnecessary.

As managers on the part of the House, we have agreed to several compromise amendments on House-passed provisions. We have included the House-passed level of $17 million for salaries and expenses at the Farmers Home Administration, but have deleted our language requiring the Secretary of Agriculture to suspend payment of principal and interest and forego foreclosure in certain circumstances. We have also compromised on the level of supplemental funding for the Temporary Emergency Food Assistance Program, and agreed to a level of $7 million to be available through March 31, 1986. As a House conferee, it is my intention to work closely with the U.S. Food and Nutrition Service to monitor State management of these TEFAP funds in light of the concerns which I expressed during House floor consideration of H.R. 2577 last month.

Our conference agreement also proposes that the House recede on various Senate amendments in technical disagreement. These include Deficit Reduction Act rescissions for the Agricultural Research Service ($1,000,000), the Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service ($400,000), the Economic Research Service ($50,000), the Statistical Reporting Service ($100,000), the Packers and Stockyards Administration ($85,000) and the Foreign Agricultural Service ($100,000). We further propose adoption of a $49,000 Deficit Reduction Act rescission for USDA departmental administration.

Among other agreements reached by the conferees are: adoption of the Senate language providing for the relocation of the Fort Stanton Experiment Station; $2 million for Cooperative State Research Service graduate fellowship grants; $3.5 million for a CSRS grant to Mississippi State University to include $700,000 previously appropriated for this project, and requiring that the funds be matched by non-Federal sources; $200,000 for a CSRS grant to the University of Kansas; $19 million to restore funds borrowed from various APHIS accounts by the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a Grasshopper Control Program; $700,000 for the Agricultural Marketing Service's Egg Inspection Program; adoption of the Senate-passed language providing that the authority of the CCC to lease space shall not be restricted; a $1 billion reduction in the reimbursement to the CCC for net realized losses to reflect enactment of the urgent supplemental (Public Law 99-71); an extension of the arrangement for school districts receiving all cash or all letters of credit in lieu of commodities until December 31, 1985; adoption of the Senate amendment allowing publicly operated community health centers to redeem food stamps for residents who would otherwise be eligible for food stamps were they not living in those centers; and adoption of the Senate amendment extending the National Commodity Processing Program through June 30, 1986.

To refresh the memory of my colleagues, the supplemental for fiscal year 1985 which we consider today also contains a number of program supplementals which, because they were included in both the House- and Senate-passed versions, were beyond the scope of the conference. These include $50 million for the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation for subscription to capital stock; an increase of $113 million in borrowing authority for the FCIC; $318.9 million for the Food Stamp Program; $300,000 for shrimp aquaculture research the CSRS; and $1.56 million for the Statistical Reporting Service's Quarterly Farm Labor Survey.

With regard to increase for pay costs, the conferees have recommended a total of $46.5 million, including $673,000 by transfer and $903,000 in increases in limitations. These recommendations are contained in title II of the bill, and are the same as the House-passed levels.

COMMERCE, JUSTICE, STATE, JUDICIARY

The major item within the jurisdiction of the Commerce, Justice, State and Judiciary Subcommittee in the bill was not subject to conference action. That is $234 million included in both the House and Senate bills for phase II of the State Department Security Enhancement Program. This amount is in addition to $110 million provided for phase I in the fiscal 1985 continuing resolution. These funds will be used to relocate a number of embassies, especially in the Middle East and Persian Gulf areas, and to upgrade the security at other facilities.

The bill includes $20 million for U.S. contractor claims and other expenses related to the continuing delay in the construction of the U.S. Embassy in Moscow. The conferees agreed to language in the bill prohibiting the Soviets from occupying their new embassy in Washington until the United States has been reimbursed for these costs.

The bill also provides $125 million for the fiscal year 1985 and fiscal year 1986 costs of the commercialization of the Landsat system, $31 million for projects in New Hampshire, Oregon, and South Carolina by the Economic Development Administration, $28 million for Small Business Administration loans, $15 million for additional U.S. attorneys and marshals and related expenses necessary to begin the implementation of the Comprehensive Crime Control Act of 1984 and to enhance Federal drug law enforcement, $18 million for Drug Enforcement Administration activities, $4 million for legal services programs at Drake University School of Law in Des Moines, IA, and $9 million for additional USIA educational exchange programs in Central America.

The conferees deleted House language banning the implementation of any rule allowing the payback of Maritime Administration construction differential subsidies for the purpose of escaping the restrictions on domestic shipping. In the statement of the managers of the conferees encourage the Secretary of Transportation and the Maritime Administration to delay enforcement of such a rule until the completion of pending litigation or legislation, or for the balance of this fiscal year which ends September 30, 1985, whichever is sooner.

There is also compromise language in the statement of the managers dealing with competition in the area of International Telecommunications Satellite Services. The language is an attempt to balance the need to protect the future of the Intelsat system, while at the same time provide a measured and fair opportunity for free market competition in services not now available.

CHAPTER IV—ENERGY AND WATER DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Speaker, the energy and water development portion of the supplemental was, next to the question of aid to the Nicaraguan Contras, perhaps the most controversial part of this bill. The House conferees, especially the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS], devoted a great deal of time and effort to bringing out an agreement on water projects that would respond to the needs and requests of our House colleagues, while also including cost-sharing language acceptable to the administration. As with any agreement, there are specific portions of this section with which I do not agree. Nevertheless, I believe that your conferees have succeeded admirably in their difficult task.

As it left the House, following the striking of unauthorized Corps of Engineers projects on a point of order and the adoption of the Edgar amendment, the bill contained $71 million for 35 new water projects. Those 35 included 31 authorized new Corps of Engineers projects and four authorized Bureau of Reclamation projects.

The conference agreement contains $63 million for 45 new starts, including the 4 Bureau of Reclamation projects originally contained in the House-passed bill. Of the 41 new corps projects, 21 are currently unauthorized, and would be authorized in this bill.

I have generally opposed the inclusion of unauthorized water projects in appropriations measures, and am far from enthusiastic about their appearance in this conference agreement. My views are tempered, however, by the presence of significant cost-sharing language in the final version of this bill.

The conferees have agreed to the Senate "fencing" language, which provides that none of the funds appropriated for new water projects may be expended until a cost-sharing agreement has been entered into between the project sponsor and either the Corps of Engineers or the Bureau of Reclamation. The funds appropriated in this bill will lapse unless such an agreement has been entered into by June 30, 1986.

Mr. Speaker, this language will permit many of the projects contained in this bill to get underway immediately—to the great relief of many of our colleagues who have been waiting years to see construction begin. In addition, there is still a strong incentive to enact a comprehensive public works authorization bill, since the enactment of such a measure would make it possible to modify cost-sharing requirements being imposed by the administration in these cost-sharing agreements.

Mr. Speaker, I would note at this point that there is an exemption from this cost-sharing requirements for elements of the Mississippi River and tributaries project. My understanding is that the only two items affected by this exemption in this bill are the Atchafalaya Basin Floodway in Louisiana and the Eight Mile Creek project in Arkansas. I predicted before that our distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Mississippi, would find a way to get around this cost-sharing requirement, and here it is. I believe that such an exception is unfair to the rest of the country, and is inappropriate. But I would also point out that this is not permanent law—it affects only the funds in this bill, and can be superseded by subsequent enactments. I hope that it will be dealt with in the omnibus public works authorization measure.

Mr. Speaker, among the other items in this section of the conference agreement, I would note that we have provided $5 million for a TVA water transmission line at Bristol, TN.

FOREIGN OPERATIONS

In regard to assistance to the Nicaraguan Contras, the Senate receded to House language, the McDade amendment, providing $27 million in humanitarian assistance through an agency designated by the President. The President is prohibited from designating the Central Intelligence Agency or the Department of Defense to administer these funds. The House adopted identical language on June 12 by a vote of 248 to 184. The same language is also included in the conference report on the foreign assistance authorization bill.

The House conferees agreed to the Senate amendment providing $250 million in economic assistance to Jordan over the next 3 years, as requested by the administration. While not subject to conference action, the bill also provides $1.5 billion for Israel and $500 million for Egypt over the next 14 months. The conferees also agreed to transfer $12.5 million to Israel to help pay the costs of resettling Ethiopian jews.

Regarding population planning, the House conferees receded to Senate language directing the President to make the determination as to when funds will be withheld from population organizations or programs because of coercive abortion activities and adding involuntary sterilization to the prohibited activities.

Both House and Senate bills included $236.7 million in budget authority and $1.2 billion in off-budget callable capital to bring the U.S. payments to several international financial institutions up to date.

CHAPTER VI—HUD-INDEPENDENT AGENCIES

For chapter VI or title I, the conferees recommend—$295.006 million, including $260.22 million in appropriations, rescissions of $26.29 million, and rescissions of contract authority totaling $528.94 million. This overall reduction in fiscal year 1985 levels represents increases of $94.14 million over House-passed levels, decreases of $96.29 million from Senate-passed levels, and increases over the administration's request of $58.93 million in this fiscal year 1985 supplemental.

Of the 20 program-related Senate amendments, the managers on the part of the Senate have agreed to recede on three. These include a $4.125 million Deficit Reduction Act rescission in the Environmental Protection Agency's Research and Development account, a $2.109 million Deficit Reduction Act rescission in the Veterans' Administration's medical administration and miscellaneous operating expenses account, and a $337,000 Deficit Reduction Act rescission in the VA's construction, minor projects account.

The House conferees have agreed to recede on seven Senate amendments. In doing so, we recommend that balances in fiscal year 1985 payments for operation of low-income housing projects remain available for obligation in fiscal year 1986; we make available an additional $120,000 for the Office of Science and Technology Policy; we rescind only $4 million of the total $6 million NASA research and program management rescission pursuant to the Deficit Reduction Act; we agree to the $100,000 Office of Revenue Sharing Deficit Reduction Act rescission as proposed by the Senate; we delete the House-passed rescission of $150,000 in Veterans' Administration medical and prosthetic research and the $2 million proposed for rescission in the VA's general operating expenses account. Finally, we agree to delete the $44.2 million which we included for VA readjustment benefits based upon a revised supplemental request submitted by the administration.

As managers on the part of the House, we have agreed to several compromise amendments on House-passed provisions. For the Environmental Protection Agency, we recommend $20 million for abatement, control and compliance, and direct that, of these funds, $12 million be for RCRA activities, $4 million for asbestos abatement assistance and $4 million for water quality enforcement State grants to include pretreatment. We have also agreed to appropriate $4 million for EPA salaries and expenses, and place a priority on intramural research support and equipment costs.

Our conference agreement also proposes that the House recede on various Senate amendments in technical disagreement. These include the transfer of $4 million for the Department of Housing and Urban Development's salaries and expenses from the various funds of the Federal Housing Administration; making available up to $1 million in excess salaries and expenses funds of the American Battle Monuments Commission for purchasing equipment and services; an appropriation of $100,000 for the Arctic Research Commission; a Deficit Reduction Act rescission of $3.52 million in the VA medical care account.

Among other agreements reached by the conferees are: An additional $500,000 for EPA buildings and facilities with a restriction on the obligation of these funds until the completion of a feasibility study on cost-effective ways of housing the Newport, OR, Research Program; the transfer of $1.105 million to the salaries and expenses account at the Federal Emergency Management Agency from the emergency management planning and assistance account: and an additional $40 million to partially offset a significant cost overrun in the Shuttle Centaur Program at NASA, delaying the obligation of these funds until March 1, 1986, to permit the Congress to review program development problems.

On an issue of great concern to many of my colleagues in this body, the Emergency Food and Shelter Program, the conferees have agreed to provide $20 million for the remainder of fiscal year 1985, and to consider an additional amount in connection with the regular fiscal year 1986 appropriation bill. As many of my colleagues recall, H.R. 3038, the fiscal year 1986 HUD-Independent Agencies appropriation bill which passed the House on July 25 contained $70 million in fiscal year 1986 funds for this FEMA-administered program.

In addition to providing supplemental funds to be distributed to individual localities through the national board, the conferees have also agreed to adopt two amendments involving the Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency and the Secretary of Agriculture. The Director and the Secretary are to review the reported condition of homeless and disadvantaged Americans in cities and counties throughout the Nation and to report to the House and Senate Appropriations Committees their recommendations for correcting and improving this situation. As a manager on the part of the House, it is my hope that the Director of FEMA and the Secretary of Agriculture as well as the national board in determining the formula for distribution of program funds, will carefully review the needs of the disadvantaged residing in the Massachusetts counties of Berkshire, Franklin, Hamden, Hampshire, and Worcester where certain economic disasters occurring since the 1980 census have significantly affected unemployment and poverty levels.

H.R. 2577 also contains a number of program supplementals which, because they were included in both the House- and Senate-passed versions, were beyond the scope of the conference. These include the Rental Housing Assistance Program rescission; making available $2.5 million in UDAG fiscal year 1985 technical assistance funds for grant awards directly; a $6.9 million HUD management and administration Deficit Reduction Act rescission; an additional $500,000 for the Consumer Product Safety Commission; clarifying language on the San Diego sewage treatment facility; $2.073 million in Deficit Reduction Act rescissions at FEMA; a $63,000 Deficit Reduction Act rescission for the Consumer Information Center; clarifying language on the amount of fiscal year 1985 space station funding for NASA; a $1 million Deficit Reduction Act rescission in the NSF research and related activities account; $175 million for VA compensation and pensions.

CHAPTER VII—INTERIOR SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker, of the 44 amendments in disagreement in chapter VII only a few were truly controversial and required significant discussion.

The administration proposed deferral of funds for the strategic petroleum reserve oil account. In the latest budget submission, the administration proposed an immediate and indefinite moratorium on oil acquisition and construction for SPRO. In H.R. 2577, the House overturned the deferral and proposed to obligate the $827 million available for oil acquisition. Consistent with its budget resolution, the Senate deleted the House deferral rejection in favor of the administration's proposed moratorium. The conferees agreed to an immediate obligation of $290 million for oil acquisition and deferred the remaining amount. This amount is to be used to fill the strategic petroleum reserve to a total of 500 million barrels.

The conferees also agreed to disapprove $39.2 million of fossil energy R&D deferrals instead of $38.9 million as proposed by the House and $8.4 million as proposed by the Senate. Report language concerning cost sharing for the MHD project is also included.

The conferees agreed to accept the House language regarding the implementation of the proposed Bureau of Land Management-Forest Service land interchange. The House language strictly prohibits the use of any funds to implement the program before authorizing legislation is enacted.

Finally, the conferees agreed to compromise language on amendment 200. The agreement includes bill language that will allow the Forest Service to resell timber in certain districts in Oregon under the Federal Timber Contract Payment Modification Act. This will allow local mills to continue operations while the agency continues the development of a forest management plan. However, language is also included directing the Secretary to consider the environmental consequences of each sale and to categorize each sale's environmental impact as minimal, moderate, or serious.

CHAPTER XI: TREASURY-POSTAL SERVICE SUBCOMMITTEE

Chapter XI, the Treasury, Postal Service, General Government section, contained two items in serious disagreement that were eventually resolved by the conferees.

First, the Senate agreed to accept a House provision that makes available an additional $22.6 million for the completion of a Federal building in Long Beach, CA. The continuing resolution last year provided funds to begin the project construction.

Second, the conferees resolved—at least for now—a controversy surrounding pay for performance regulations proposed to be issued by the Office of Personnel Management. In the continuing resolution last year, I proposed compromise language to continue the 4-year-old ban on the implementation of the regulations until July 1, 1985. Last month when the ban expired, the administration implemented the regulations.

The conferees agreed to end the ban proposed by the House. The agreement does not include bill language on the OPM regulations, but does include instructive report language regarding future negotiations between interested parties.

LEGISLATIVE BRANCH

The House conferees receded to the Senate on two Senate housekeeping amendments in keeping with the tradition of comity.

The House also receded on an amendment providing $5 million to the General Accounting Office to settle two class action claims. The claims deal with alleged discriminatory promotion practices and promotions, training and awards.

CHAPTER X—TRANSPORTATION

Mr. Speaker, the section of the supplemental dealing with the Department of Transportation and related agencies contains several items that I would bring to the attention of my colleagues. For the Coast Guard, we have provided an additional $27.7 million for aircraft, vessels, and aerostats to assist with the drug interdiction effort. In addition, we retained the $15 million in additional operating expenses that had been agreed to on the House floor. This money will permit the maintenance of military personnel levels at the 38,900 level.

For the Interstate Commerce Commission, we have provided $3.1 million. This amount will provide adequate funds for personnel expenses for the remainder of the fiscal year, thereby stopping the furloughs that had crippled the Commission's work between April and June. In addition to the $3 million that had been included by the Senate, the remaining $100,000 is to be used to help reduce the backlog of work that developed during the furlough period.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 8 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. NATCHER].

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, chapter VIII of the 1985 supplemental appropriations bill—H.R. 2577—provides $4,714,838,000 in additional appropriations for the program considered by the Labor-HHS-Education Subcommittee. These supplemental appropriations reinforce the priorities which were incorporated in the regular 1985 appropriation act—Public Law 98-619—which became law on November 8, 1984. When we presented the Labor-HHS-Education appropriation bill for 1985 to the House for approval last year, we were proud of the funding increases we had recommended for biomedical research, Pell grants for college students, chapter I grants to keep disadvantaged children in elementary and secondary schools, and several other major programs that mean so much to the people in this country. Mr. Speaker, these increases were contained in the bill that was later signed by the President on November 8, 1984. These increases were necessary then and they are necessary now. There is no backsliding on these programs in the supplemental appropriations bill that is now before us.

STUDENT ASSISTANCE

One of our top priorities for 1985 is continuation of Federal financial assistance for students at our colleges and universities. Anyone who has a member of their family attending an institution of higher education, whether public or private, knows that charges for tuition and other expenses continue to rise every year.

Chapter VIII includes a supplemental amount of $287 million for the Pell Grant Program. Adding this amount to the $3,325 million included in the 1985 Appropriations Act will provide a total of $3,612 million for Pell grant awards for the coming academic year 1985–86.

In the 1985 appropriation for the Department of Education we recommended, and Congress approved, a maximum Pell grant award of $2,100 up to a limit of 60 percent of the cost of attendance at a college or university. These provisions were included in the appropriations bill signed by the President on November 8, 1984.

In the 1985 supplemental budget submitted by the President on February 4, 1985, a request was included to reduce the maximum Pell grant from $2,100 to $2,000 to cover up to 50 percent of the cost of attendance. We examined this request from the President and found that almost 1 million low income students would receive little or no increase in their Pell grant award.

The subcommittee recommended going along part way with the budget request by providing a maximum grant of $2,100 up to 50 percent of the cost of attendance. But this action would also have resulted in many low income students attending public community colleges not receiving any increase in their Pell grant award.

In full committee, I offered an amendment which was adopted to retain the maximum grant of $2,100 to cover up to 60 percent of the cost of attendance. I felt we were right last year when the 1985 appropriation was enacted and I still feel that we should stay with it and make no changes. Millions of low income students have been counting on some increase in their Pell grant award, and I think we should help them as much as we can.

The Senate agreed with the House proposal with regard to Pell grants, and the additional $287 million will be provided in this bill. It is clearly congressional intent that the 1985 funds should be used to provide a maximum Pell grant of $2,100 to cover up to 60 percent of the cost of attendance. We believe that the administration should submit a budget request to cover prior year shortfalls in Pell grant funding, so that it will no longer be necessary to borrow against future year appropriations in order to maintain this program at the current level.

The supplemental appropriation bill also contains $720,346,000 for guaranteed student loans, an authorization of $250,000,000 for health education assistance loans [HEAL] for students in the health professions, and an additional appropriation of $2,482,000 for national direct student loans.

BIOMEDICAL RESEARCH

Mr. Speaker, another program which had high priority in the 1985 appropriation act was biomedical research supported through the National Institutes of Health. The bill which the President signed last November provided a total of $5,149,985,000 for NIH. The heart of the NIH program is the investigator-initiated research grant. The 1985 appropriation included $2,786,999,000 for 18,698 of these grants, of which $937,637,000 was to be used for new research grants and competitive renewals of ongoing research grants whose grant periods had expired. NIH estimated that 6,526 such new and competing grants could be funded. In addition, $479,775,000 was provided for 533 research centers. In January, when the 1986 budget was submitted, it was revealed that the administration proposed to fund only 5,000 new and competing research grants and 500 research centers in fiscal year 1985. This would be accomplished, not by seeking a deferral or rescission in compliance with the terms of the Impoundment Control Act, but simply by using $203,709,000 of the funds appropriated for research grants and $34,875,000 of the funds appropriated for research centers to forward fund 1986 and 1987 costs. This unusual plan was directly contrary to congressional intent; it has been held to be unlawful by the Comptroller General; and it is decisively rejected in the conference agreement on the supplemental appropriations bill. The conference agreement requires the funding of no fewer than 6,200 new and competing research grants and 533 research centers. These are essentially the levels which were approved by the House when it acted on the 1985 appropriation bill approximately 1 year ago. For new and competing research grants, we are providing $937,637,000, of which up to $20,000,000 may be carried forward into 1986, if not needed to fund the 1985 program. This is $200,000,000 more than the amount provided for new and competing research grants in 1984.

I would like to mention a few of the other programs which are dealt with in chapter VIII.

PAYMENTS TO SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUNDS

The largest single item is an appropriation of $3,500,000,000 for payment to the Social Security Trust Fund to cover the cost of wage credits for military service prior to 1957. This payment is required by the Social Security Amendments of 1983. The appropriation was requested by the President, and included in both the House and Senate bills.

VOCATIONAL EDUCATION

When we marked up the 1985 appropriation bill, last year, we included in it the full amount authorized for vocational education. Subsequently, amendments to the Vocational Education Act, named after our good friend and colleague, the late Carl D. Perkins, were enacted. We have included in this supplemental appropriation bill $100 million to provide a 15-percent increase in vocational education basic grants under the new authorization. This will provide a total of $784 million for basic grants in 1985.

STATE EMPLOYMENT SECURITY AGENCIES

The House bill included an additional appropriation of $30 million to cover costs incurred by State agencies in the administration of the unemployment insurance program. We received letters from many members indicating that some State offices might have to close down if the additional funds were not provided. We were able to persuade the Senate conferees to agree to $20 million for this purpose.

OTHER PROGRAMS

Mr. Speaker, I have mentioned a few of the more important provisions of chapter VIII of the bill. There are others, affecting programs which require further congressional action including emergency medical services for children, alcohol, drug abuse and mental health research grants, job training programs, child abuse and family violence prevention, National Graduate Fellowships, foster care, adoption assistance, nursing research, vocational rehabilitation, and adult education. These are all meritorious programs which require additional funding or other adjustments due to change circumstances, the enactment of new legislation, revised estimates, or administrative actions taken by the executive branch since the enactment of the regular 1985 appropriation act.

I recommend the adoption of this conference report.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NATCHER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to express my appreciation for the courtesy shown by the gentleman from Kentucky, the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, in consulting with me in advance about a provision in this bill which concerns the Health Education Assistance Loan [HEAL] Program. I have some questions about that provision.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman's kind words, and I would be delighted to answer any questions.

Mr. WAXMAN. It is my understanding that this provision would allow the Department of Health and Human Services to issue certificates of insurance for up to $250 million in HEAL loans during the current fiscal year.

Mr. NATCHER. The gentleman is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WAXMAN. This action has become necessary because the President pocket-vetoed the Public Health Service Act Amendments of 1984, creating an immediate crisis for students who depend on the high-interest HEAL loans as a last resort.

Mr. NATCHER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WAXMAN. It is my understanding that the authority in this bill will be used to make continuing loans to previous borrowers. Because of the "sunset" provision in the HEAL statute, only the unused authority from fiscal year 1984 can be used to make loans to new borrowers. Thus, once the fiscal year 1984 balance runs out, certificates of insurance will no longer be issued for loans to new borrowers.

Mr. NATCHER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WAXMAN. This bill, then, is only a temporary measure to help health professions students who need to know whether they will be able to borrow funds to attend school this fall. The gentleman and I both recognize that this emergency action is appropriate for this one time only. Enactment of the reauthorization bill, H.R. 2410, which recently passed this House, is necessary to provide for continuation of the HEAL Program in the future.

Mr. NATCHER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I commend him for his efforts and concern in this area.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, what the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] is indicating would not affect the ability of first-year students to obtain loans under this program; isn't that correct?

Mr. WAXMAN. If the gentleman will yield to me, there should be enough funds available to take care of that.

Mr. CONTE. They still can get their loans?

Mr. WAXMAN. Yes; there are carryover funds.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the attention of my good friend, the gentleman from Kentucky, BILL NATCHER. I did not know we were going to get to this section at this time, but I just want to take this opportunity to say what a great pleasure it has been for me not only this time but down through the years to work with my dear and beloved friend, BILL NATCHER, one of the finest men who ever served in this House. He has done a remarkable job in this section.

BILL, I know there are time constraints, but I did not hear you mention that we have $100 million in here also for vocational education under the new Perkins Act. But the big thing was the new and competing grants under the National Institutes of Health. The Senate had stated that they were going to go to 6,000 new and competing grants. It was in this conference that BILL and I met with Senator WEICKER and Senator PROXMIRE. We got that figure up to 6,200 new and competing grants, thanks to the leadership of our good friend from Kentucky, and 533 centers. But the one that pleased me most—and I know that somebody close to me is going to be very pleased—is bringing up the figure to 550 grants for the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration, which the Senate had cut down to a level of 540. I certainly felt that the National Institute of Mental Health would have been unduly held back by that agreement, so we worked hard to get those additional grants. I told BILL and the chairman of the same committee, our counterpart, on the other side, that I could not go home for supper that night unless we increased that. I want to thank my good friend.

Mr. Speaker, chapter VIII of this supplemental, the Labor, Health and Human Services and Education section, provides a total of $4,715 billion, $122 million more than the House-passed version, $63 million less than the Senate-passed version, and $506 million more than the administration's request.

Just about all of the provisions passed by the House were retained in the Senate-passed bill and so were not part of the conference: up to $3.5 billion for Social Security, to cash out military service credits, as requested by the administration; $720 million for guaranteed student loans, of which $655 million was requested by the administration; $287 million for Pell grants, to provide funding for the full cost of a program based on a maximum grants of $2,100 and a 60-percent cost of attendance allowance; $79.5 million for foster care and adoption assistance; and $6 million for the Family Violence Prevention and Services Act, which was added to the bill by my amendment in the full committee.

The one exception was the $30 million in trust funds added by the House for the Department of Labor Employment Service to cover shortfalls being experienced by the Senate in the nonpersonal services budget, with was deleted by the Senate. The conference report provides $20 milion for that purpose.

Of the $185 million in additional funds added by the Senate, the largest item, $146.3 million, was for vocational education. The conference report retains $100 million for the State Block Grant Program, but deletes the $46,3 million for several new programs authorized by the Perkins Act, since there are only 2 months left in the fiscal year, not enough to set into operation these new programs.

The conference report also contains funding for a number of smaller items: $9.5 million for three hold-harmless provisions, to assure that no State receives less than its 1984 allocation, for the Job Training Partnership Act Migrant Program, the Adult Education Program, and the National Direct Student Loan Program; $5 million for a new Child Abuse Grant Program, to remain available through fiscal year 1986; $3 million for a cancer center in St. George, UT; $2 million for a new Children's Emergency Medical Services Program, to remain available through fiscal year 1986; $1.7 million to cover a default in the Health Maintenance Organization Loan Program; and $715,000 for Vocational Rehabilitation for Native American Programs.

In addition to the new Vocational Education Programs added by the Senate but deleted in conference, funding for a number of other new programs added by the Senate was deleted: $5 million for the dependent care block grant; $5 million for a Library Literacy Program; $3 million for Preventive Health Centers; $2 million for a health research center at the University of Utah; and $1 million for an alcohol and drug abuse clinical training program. These programs will be looked at again, I am sure, in conjunction with the fiscal year 1986 Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education appropriations bill. In addition, $800,000 of the $1.2 million proposed for the Organ Transplant Program was provided through reprogramming rather than new funding.

In addition, there were a number of language items included in the conference report. The most significant are the provisions setting the final level of new and competing grants for the National Institutes of Health and the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration. In the regular fiscal year 1985 appropriations bill, Congress provided for 6,526 new and competing grants and 533 centers for NIH and 583 new and competing grants for ADAMHA. As part of the fiscal year 1986 budget submission, the Office of Management and Budget proposed to limit the NIH grants and centers to 5,000 and 500 respectively, and the ADAMHA grants to 500, by an unprecedented, and I might say unacceptable and illegal, notion of providing mul-tiyear funding out of funds appropriated in fiscal year 1985. The Senate and the administration, during the debate over the fiscal year 1986 budget, came to an agreement of 6,000 grants and 517 centers for NIH and 540 grants for ADAMHA. But, of course, the House was not part of those negotiations. I am pleased to say that Chairman NATCHER and I finally managed to have a little input into these figures, and we came up with the 6,200 grants and 533 centers for NIH and 550 grants for ADAMHA.

Let me just make a couple of comments on this agreement.

First, with 533 centers, the full number appropriated in the regular fiscal year 1985 bill, this should allow the second round of Digestive Disease Centers to be funded. This agreement should permit an additional 3 or 4 centers, for a total of 9 or 10 new Digestive Disease Centers of Excellence.

Second, I am pleased that the conferees were able to agree on a level of 550 grants for ADAMHA. The preliminary agreement was at a level of 540, and I felt that the National Institute of Mental Health would have been unduly held back by that agreement, so I worked hard to obtain those additional grants. I don't know why, Mr. Speaker, but sometimes it seems that mental health programs have to work about 10 times harder to get the recognition that NIH gets, and yet the work being carried out there is no less important, and no less promising than the research being done at NIH.

In addition, this bill contains a language provision requested by the administration and included in both the House- and Senate-passed versions to correct a technical problem with funding for handicapped education personnel preparation that crept into the 1985 regular bill as part of a Senate amendment.

That error effectively denied funding to personnel preparation projects during the month of June. Now that the error has been corrected, it is my expectation that the Department will go back and make those projects whole for the unreimbursed work that was done during the month of June.

The conference report also contains an authorization for $250 million of health education assistance loans, and should remedy the problem that has prevented first-year students from borrowing under this program up to this point in the fiscal year.

And, among other provisions, the conference report contains extended availability for funds previously appropriated for either the Nursing Institute or Center for Nursing Research, whichever gets authorized, and for the National Graduate Fellowship Program.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the conferees did a good job of resolving the 34 amendments added by the Senate to the Labor/HHS/Education section, and I believe the Members should support the outcome.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I want the Members of the House to know that it is a distinct honor and privilege for me to serve with my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE].

Mr. MCDADE. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this conference report and urge its approval by my colleagues. I would like to compliment my colleagues on the conference committee especially Chairman WHITTEN and Congressman CONTE for providing their usual steady leadership; and my good friend from New York, Mr. ADDABBO, chairman of our defense subcommittee with whom I currently work most directly.

Regarding the defense portion of this supplemental, in my judgment it is noncontroversial. It provides for the pay raises for DOD personnel in this fiscal year, and I am pleased to report that the conferees were able to find ways to fund nearly half the request—over $900 million—from prior year appropriations, either contract savings or transfers. I commend our staff, as well as the conferrees from the other body, for helping us identify these funds and enable us to reduce the new money needed for the pay raise.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I would like to share my thoughts with the House concerning another conference item—a major issue—the section dealing with the Nicaraguan situation.

We spent a great deal of time in conference on the issue of Nicaragua, and in the end, the other body receded to the House position. While there were a number of differences between the two Chambers' bills, the primary concern in conference was which departments would be candidates for administering the humanitarian aid. The House language expressly prohibited CIA or DOD from playing such a role, while the other body had no such proviso.

The House position on CIA or DOD involvement is quite clear, and to their credit, the other body's conferees recognized this and did not make CIA or DOD direction or administration of the program a major issue, one that could jeopardize the entire aid package. Let me restate the conference's agreement: CIA or DOD will not administer this aid, nor have any hands-on involvement in its procurement or delivery.

The majority of the conferees were concerned, however, that whoever administers this aid, the program must be executed efficiently, cost effectively, and most importantly, in as safe a fashion as possible. We agreed that the administrator of the aid effort should, if necessary, be able to consult with any entity of the U.S. Government in order to implement this program in the most effective manner, consistent with foreign policy objectives.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to note that the conferees on the foreign aid bill adopted a similar posture on Nicaragua as did our conference. This unanimity signals, I hope, the emergence of a true bipartisan consensus on foreign policy questions in general and on this most vexing issue, which we have spent so much time debating and discussing.

This consensus—reflected in the Nicaragua provisions of this bill—provides a solid foundation for U.S. policy toward Nicaragua and all of Central America. This approach is evenhanded; it allows for flexibility; and it looks to the future.

By providing assistance to the Contras, we show our disgust with the Sandinistas' policies of repression, and our support for those who are trying to bring democracy to that country. But by providing humanitarian aid—in the open—we affirm our dedication to and emphasis on a negotiated, diplomatic solution between the Nicaraguan people themselves.

Yes, we apply pressure on the Sandinistas to change—but the provisions of this bill also provide them with a great opportunity. If there is any progress toward peace—progress toward peace—this bill provides a vehicle for fast-track consideration of additional aid to further the peace process. This could be more material help for the Contadora group; to Nicaragua's neighbors; or economic aid to the Nicaraguan people themselves. If conditions warrant, we could create a Marshall plan for all of Central America.

But the United States cannot move effectively in this direction without a sign from the Sandinistas themselves, that they too are willing to truly search for peace. All that is needed is for the Sandinistas to take a tangible, good-faith step toward implementing the goals of their own revolution, 6 years ago. Open and fair elections. Freedom of religion and expression. National reconciliation, and a dialog with their opposition.

The Sandinistas came to power promising democracy, but have delivered repression. But with the passage of this bill, the United States offers to put the past behind us. We ask only that Nicaragua lives up to its promises. We ask that they respond, in kind, to the offer made by the Democratic resistance: To stop the fighting, to negotiate, to bring pluralism to Nicaragua.

Passage of this supplemental will emphasize to all that the United States stands with freedom and seeks to bring a true settlement to the problems of Nicaragua. My colleagues, I urge your support.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I very strongly support this conference report. I point out that in the section that I was primarily responsible for, there were 67 amendments. It took considerable time to work out some of those amendments and several of those deal with matters which have become of even greater concern since the fiscal year 1985 appropriation bill was enacted last year.

I mention that among them was law enforcement. The fiscal year 1985 continuing resolution contained the largest crime bill ever passed in the history of the Congress, and there are positions in this supplemental to start the enforcement of that law. There are also additional positions for Drug Enforcement. There are additional resources for antiterrorist activities, and a substantial amount of money for the security for overseas facilities and personnel to deal with terrorist activities and the security of U.S. Government employees overseas.

The pilot Central American Scholarship Program was an issue that we did have some difficulty with. We started that program under a reprogramming, and approved a program of 143 students. It is a pilot program and the intention was to have a 2-year program that would be completed and evaluated in that 2-year period of time before we decide whether or not to go on or what kind of a program to have after that.

We did have differences of opinion with the Senate on that, but in the end, we resolved to keep the pilot program and put in another $800,000 because the cost per student has been exceeding that estimated by the administration. This fact points up even more why we need to keep this as a pilot program since the estimates have not come in at the projected level.

The CDS payback matter was again a problem, but in this conference report we asked the Department of Transportation to hold off on implementing a rule until the first of October, and in that period of time, bills that are proceeding in the Congress may be passed. We expect that the authorizing committees should be able to handle this matter without further problems with regard to any of the appropriations bills.

I want to comment on a provision in the statement of the managers on Intelsat. The Intelsat language represents a compromise in the House and Senate reports dealing with that matter. In November of last year, the President determined that the authorization of telecommunications systems separate from Intelsat was in the national interest, so long as our legal obligations were met, and in particular, so long as the systems were sufficiently limited in their operation, that they could not cause significant economic harm to Intelsat's global telecommunications network.

Language was inserted in the Appropriations Committee report on the House side in order to emphasize the Committee's strong concern that the FCC faithfully and effectively enforce the safeguards for Intelsat specified by the President, and in the conference report, there is language to that effect.

Now, last week, just prior to the completion of the conference committe work on this issue, the FCC acted to conditionally grant three of the six applications to create private, separate satellite systems. Two commissioners withheld their votes out of concern that the majority had failed to impose safeguards sufficient to carry out the President's injunction against causing significant economic harm to Intelsat. The basic purpose of the language in the statement of the managers is once again to underscore the fact that the conferees from both the House and Senate strongly believe that, "That action by the FCC as well as the executive branch, relating to the international telecommunications satellite issues must adhere to the United States' obligation to 'avoid significant economic harm to Intelsat.'"

As explained in the executive branch white paper released earlier this year to support the President's decision to recommend authorization of separate systems, only with safeguards for preserving Intelsat, "The United States played a leading role in the creation of Intelsat in order to further political, economic, and security objectives [and it] became a centerpiece of overall U.S. space and foreign policy programs."

In order to preclude "unrestricted entry" by private satellite systems, which "could ultimately undermine the economic integrity of this important international enterprise" the white paper explained, the President specified that the new private systems must be resticted to providing private "customized" service, as distinguished from general, public, "switched" general telecommunications service. "Customized," the white paper went on to specify, meant "intracorporate networks and television transmission."

However, although the FCC has not yet made clear the precise terms of its decision, under the order that two commissioners were not prepared to accept last week, it appears it may be permissible to link combinations of corporate networks or to combine numerous corporations in a single network. Such a provision in the President's safeguards would threaten to divert from Intelsat major portions of the voice and data revenues between highly developed countries; these revenues are essential for the support of Intelsat's global mission.

In short, under such a provision, the Commission's decision—still preliminary and tentative—would permit the new systems to engage in skimming.

The statement of managers on this bill underscores Congress' concern with any decision that would permit such evasion of the President's purpose and expect that the U.S. support, in practice as well as in its formal statements, support "the continued provision of telephone service [as well as other services] by Intelsat to developing countries at affordable rates."

Similarly, the managers emphasized, that the United States must support measures necessary to enable Intelsat to compete "fully and fairly," especially on new telecommunications services, and in regard to any services—old or new—for which competitive challenges to its provison of services appear. On this point, the managers' language refers specifically to the importance of modifying article 5(d) of Intelsat's charter, to enable it to price on a route-by-route basis where necessary to meet competition, as it has never had to do in the past.

I do want to clarify one thing about this latter point. In referring to the need for Intelsat to have "adopted measures to ensure prices are cost-based and not predatory," the managers of course did not imply any view that Intelsat's prices are currently not cost-based and fair. As the executive branch white paper observed on this subject, "[W]e believe that concerns about possible predatory pricing (by Intelsat) are premature. The economic and legal literature provides very little evidence that predatory pricing has ever occurred."

Similarly, the language should not be misconstrued to support any conclusion that any new measures are needed, to ensure that Intelsat's prices are cost-based.

And in the same vein, in referring to the "release" of information showing the cost basis of Intelsat's rates, the report does not contemplate any departure from current methods for obtaining such information. The managers are aware that Comsat, the U.S. signatory to Intelsat, promptly makes available to the FCC all information relating to Intelsat operations, including services, charges, and costs, and that dissemination within the United States of such information is governed by a memorandum of understanding between the Departments of State and Commerce, the FCC, and Comsat itself.

In addition, the managers' statement underscores the Congress' recognition of the absolute and fundamental necessity for the safeguards in the President's determination of last November in assuring the avoidance of significant economic harm to Intelsat. As stated by Under Secretary of State William Schneider in testimony given in April of this year before the Subcommittee on Telecommunications of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, in which he rejected suggestions that the President's determination might only be a short-term protection:

> This anxiety has been raised. But the intention is not to allow competitors at any time in the future to go into the public switched networks, but to instead focus on new applications.

The statement of managers provides that, should this executive branch "intention" ever be changed, "a tentative decision along with the rationale for such decision shall be sent to the Congress and a final decision shall not be made until the Congress has had 45 days to review the tentative decision and the accompanying rationale."

Finally, the statement provides in the event there is an unfavorable coordination pursuant to the Intelsat agreement and the Secretary of State decides to proceed that the Secretary shall provide the Congress with a report outlining the rationale for his decision in order to provide the Congress with a reasonable opportunity to decide whether to allow his recommendation to be implemented.

The statement of the managers outlines a policy of protecting Intelsat in its present mission while assuring that any new service not now performed by Intelsat will be subject to competition and that procedures will not be followed and decisions will not be made which exclude a full opportunity for any applicant, including Intelsat, to bid for such service.

Mr. Speaker, I also strongly support a provision establishing a legal clinic at Drake University and a Des Moines River Greenbelt in this bill as well as provisions providing an additional $2½ million for an access road to the Saylorville project and lower interest rates for FMHA borrowers.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY].

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, most of us serving in the House today were not even elected to Congresss when the last major public works authorization bill was passed—that was in 1974. Since that time, the distinguished members of the Public Works Committee have tried admirably to pass major water projects bills; each time their efforts failed.

The consequence, of course, has been a tremendous deterioration in our Nation's infrastructure and a regrettable avoidance of funding for vital project needs. We are now skating on thin ice, Mr. Speaker. If we do not do something now we may never be able to regain lost ground. Having pared the number of projects down to the most essential, we have a responsible package which will work in the best interest of the entire Nation—it deserves my colleagues' support.

Let me cite just one example of the need for these projects. The Oliver lock and dam on the Black Warrior-Tombigbee Waterway at Tuscaloosa, AL is the only lock of its dimensions on the 429-mile river system. The prewar dimensions of this lock mean inordinate delays, averaging almost 3 hours—3 hours to negotiate one lock. One can imagine the backup and congestion this delay creates.

The obstruction arises from the Oliver lock's antiquated chamber size, causing barges unusual manuevering and slow downs. A new lock authorized in this amendment would accommodate the typical six-barge tow, with a single lockage, and would significantly reduce delays.

Mr. Speaker, the Oliver lock and dam reconstruction and other similar projects are critical to the Nation's continued economic revitalization. A smooth-running, operational water transportation network is just one cog in the wheel of a complete and vigorous infrastructure redevelopment.

I realize the uniqueness of the procedure under which we are considering these new projects today—and I respect the committee prerogatives. But, we cannot wait any longer, Mr. Speaker. Over a decade has been long enough, this body must take action today. I urge me colleagues to support the amendment.

□ 1250

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL].

Mr. BEVILL. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this conference report. Your House conferees worked long and hard in the conference with the other body to get the best resolution of the matters before the conference in the best interest of Members of the House. We won some items, we lost others. In the final agreements we did our best, and I feel the House should adopt the conference report and agree to the items in technical disagreement.

The most controversial amendment is No. 112, which is reported in technical disagreement and has to do with new construction starts in the Corps of Engineers. The other body had 22 projects in their version of the bill; 11 are already authorized and they authorized 11.

In the conference report, amendment 112 includes 41 new construction projects; 20 of these are already authorized and 21 are being authorized.

The compromise language allows the Secretary of the Army to enter into agreements to cost-share these projects. The language also provides that if legislation is later enacted into law, the provisions in that legislation will prevail. If agreements aren't reached by June 30, 1986, the funds provided in the bill will lapse.

Another provision included in the conference agreement would exclude existing comprehensive flood control projects affecting multi-State regions from new or additional cost-sharing. This provision applies to the "Flood Control, Mississippi River and Tributaries" project.

Mr. Speaker, there has not been a new construction start program funded for 5 years. There has not been a comprehensive new construction omnibus authorization bill for over 14 years. The gentlemen from New Jersey [Messrs. HOWARD and ROE] have passed legislation through the House on two occasions to authorize a new construction program for the Corps of Engineers. They have tried very hard to get a program authorized. Unfortunately, the other body has failed to act.

I support the efforts of the authorizing committee. If fact, you will recall that their bill was included in the House-passed continuing resolution last year and I supported that effort.

One final point: Although we were successful in getting 41 projects in the supplemental out of the 62 originally considered by my subcommittee, funding for the other 21 are included in the 1986 bill which recently passed the House.

It is my understanding that there is no controversy of the other items in the energy and water development chapter of the supplemental.

I urge my colleagues to support the work of your conference committee.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the Members' attention to several typograhical errors concerning the "Des Moines Recreational River and Greenbelt, Iowa project." The third paragraph should read:

> An advisory committee shall be established for consultation with the Department of the Army and shall include: (A) five persons appointed by the Governor of Iowa; (B) two persons appointed by their respective board of supervisors to represent each county within the Greenbelt area; (C) one person appointed by the mayor of the city of Des Moines and one additional person appointed by the mayor of each other incorporated municipality within whose boundaries a portion of such recreation area lies; and

(D) three employees or officials of the Corps of Engineers.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS].

Mrs. BOGGS. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the supplemental appropriations conference report and in support of the amendment that has to do with the public works section.

I would like to point out a couple of things about the projects that are within the purview of this amendment. We have not talked too much about some of the attributes of the programs themselves. I would like to pick out in particularity the Atchafalaya Basin project in Louisiana. It is an integral part of the plan to improve the flood control of the main stem of the Mississippi River. It serves as an outlet to carry up to one-half of the Mississippi River flood flows. The floodway contains nationally significant expanses of bottomland hardwoods and swamplands. This swamp is a national environmental treasure. It serves fisheries production which is three times greater than the Everglades. It is a waterfowl habitat and the bottom of the largest North American flyway for one-half of the migratory species. It is a source of 10 percent of the Nation's fur harvest.

Atchafalaya Basin has been one of the most hotly contested water resources controversies for the past 20 years and the provisions in this bill represent a consensus agreement that has been reached among environmentalists, landowners, industrialists, sportsmen, local interests, and State and local agencies to protect the basin's flood control and the natural resource values.

This plan will assure that the natural resources in the basin will be preserved, managed, and propagated, while the basin will still be used for handling a major portion of the annual spring floods in the Mississippi Valley.

I would like to also point out, Mr. Speaker, another project of national significance that is contained within this amendment, and that is the Mississippi River Ship Channel. This project will provide more efficient deepdraft access to the ports of New Orleans and Baton Rouge by deepening the channel to 55 feet.

In 1983, the ports of the lower Mississippi handled 175 million tons of oceangoing cargo, 20 percent of the Nation's foreign trade, 50 percent of the Nation's grain exports, and more foreign commerce than five top east coast ports combined. The Mississippi River serves the vast interior of the United States, 22 States representing 40 percent of the Nation's population and productive capacity.

If we are going to do anything to reverse our trade deficit, we must get on with developing our deepdraft ports, and this will improve the trading posture of our farmers, who ship grain down the Mississippi and the Missouri, and the coal miners and industrial workers who ship their products down the Ohio and the Kentucky Rivers.

Mr. Speaker, these are two of the projects that are contained within this amendment and they are typical of the kind of careful consideration for the national good that all of the various aspects of this amendment address.

I urge that this House get on with the business of the United States of America and pass the conference report that is before us.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, may I say that I hope that our colleagues will go along with us on this bill since we were in conference 3 days on this bill and it provides funding for the remaining 2 months of this year. The Senators by and large are in accord with this agreement. I would hate to see an amendment today that would lead to a controversy and another conference with the Senate at this time. I urge my colleagues to go along with us and let us get this behind us, because with the adjournment resolution which was adopted earlier and with the support of the Senate for the report, I would hope that we would stick to it so that we may finish this job in time to take care of the next 2 months.

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the conference report that accompanies H.R. 2577, supplemental appropriations for fiscal year 1985.

There is no clearer sign of the abrogation of our fiscal responsibility than the passage of this bill. Not everything in this bill is bad, or wasteful. But much of what has gone before has been profligate.

On July 24, the House passed a resolution indicating that we shall consider the House-passed budget for fiscal year 1986 the final version of the budget. While most of the attention appropriately focused on the fiscal year 1986 provisions of the resolution, the bill also increased our funding ceiling for fiscal year 1985.

Our original budget authority ceiling for fiscal year 1985 was $1,021.35 billion. We were rapidly approaching that ceiling, and had already broken the outlay ceiling.

When we passed our resolution for fiscal year 1986, we increased the ceiling for fiscal year 1985, as well. The new ceiling is $1,039.1 billion, a $17.75 billion increase over what we felt was adequate 10 months ago.

To date, we have spent $1,027.3 billion. This supplemental contains $13.024 billion. When this bill passes, we will be over our new, expanded budget ceiling by $1.24 billion. We will be $19 billion over our original ceiling.

It is pretty obvious that any budget resolution means nothing to the Congress.

We are in the midst of obligating spending for next year. Last year's experience is disillusioning to those who believe that the budget, and the budget process, means something.

It is clear to me that the responsibility for our spending urges does not lie with the President, or the Budget Committee conferees. We are spending so much money simply because too many believe every cause is too good, every program sacrosanct. This House is perfectly capable of controlling its spending, if it so chooses. I urge a no vote on this conference report.●

● Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, I have addressed my colleagues countless times over the past few years in support of funding necessary water projects, particularly the Ellicott Creek flood control project in western New York.

As I return to this issue once again, I am reminded of Sisyphus, the legendary King of Corinth who was condemned by the gods to push a mighty rock up a hill in Hades. Just as Sisyphus reached the apex of his journey, the rock would come tumbling down again, and he would have to begin his arduous labors anew.

Water project appropriations bills are similar to that rock that so troubled Sisyphus. Just as we are on the brink of securing final approval for critical projects, events invariably arise which push us to the bottom of the hill.

Although I am going to discuss specifically the Ellicott Creek flood control project, I'm sure the story is the same for the water projects in many of your districts which seemingly have been held hostage over the years.

Over 15 years ago, President Nixon signed into law an omnibus water bill, which included the Ellicott Creek flood control project as a response to a devastating flood in western New York. However, local farmers opposed the project because it idled agricultural land. This opposition effectively killed the project until 1981, when a new water appropriations bill containing the project was signed into law. Because President Reagan believed that States and localities should pay a greater share of the cost of flood control projects that were strictly State or local in nature, he imposed a 3-year freeze on all such undertakings.

Because the New York State Department of Transportation recognized the importance of the Ellicott Creek project, it entered into an agreement with the Army Corps of Engineers whereby the State would make in-kind contributions approximating 40 percent of the project's cost. In 1983, we made a further effort to break the deadlock caused by the cost-sharing issue and convinced the House Appropriations Committee to approve funds to start the project which had been authorized in 1970. Unfortunately, the administration killed this bill.

Last year, the water bill was again pushed to the top of the hill, only to be forced back as a result of a dispute between the President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The President dropped his request for aid to "Contras" in Nicaragua in exchange for agreement by the Speaker that the proposed water projects would not be funded. Once again, the Government failed to take the necessary steps to protect the residents of western New York from yet another flood catastrophe. In fact, in February of this year western New York suffered another serious flood which could have been prevented had the Ellicott Creek project been completed.

The debate on whether to approve these projects now centers on two critical issues: cost-sharing and jurisdictional disputes between the relevant congressional committees.

The House conferees to the supplemental appropriations conference have accepted Senate provisions that prohibit the expenditure of any funds for water projects unless the administration and local project sponsors reach a cost sharing agreement by June 30, 1986. The agreement also includes language not contained in either the House or Senate versions of the bill which requires the Army Corps of Engineers to use whatever cost sharing provision that may be enacted as part of an omnibus water projects authorization bill when negotiating cost sharing agreements with local sponsors.

At issue here is whether the House Appropriations Committee can, in effect, preempt the Public Works and Transportation Committee's legislative prerogatives in this area. In addition, the House Conferees are proposing to direct the Army Corps of Engineers to begin work on 41 new projects, 21 of which have not been authorized.

Procedurally, bills in the House of Representatives should proceed on normal course, first through authorizing committees, such as Public Works and Transportation, and subsequently through the appropriations process. However, after more than 15 years of delay, my primary concern is, once and for all, to secure funding for the Ellicott Creek flood control project. I am fed up with these intolerable delays—delays which have resulted in extensive property loss and millions of dollars in damages to the people of my own and neighboring congressional districts. We have an obligation to institute measures which can protect lives and property from the next flood, which will inevitably come.

I am deeply committed to securing the necessary appropriations for this project. Although the concerns expressed by the relevant authorizing committee are legitimate ones, I will support proposals which will facilitate the approval of this project, including those containing fair and equitable cost sharing provisions. The residents of my district would rather contribute in some measure through their localities and New York State to the cost of this project, than start again at the bottom of the mythical hill in Sisyphus' sorry tale.

For many of these projects, time is of the essence. I know that without immediate construction, the lives and homes of many area residents will once again be jeopardized. Because of this urgency, we must approve a bill which is acceptable to both Congress and the President. If this means cost-sharing for localities and States, then so be it, so long as all regions throughout the country are treated equally. At this stage, the goal is to cut losses, not to play hard ball. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to end this drawn-out, uphill struggle over water projects and to support the Whitten amendment to recede and concur with Senate amendment 112 dealing with cost-sharing for water projects.●

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The previous question was ordered. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 320, nays 106, not voting 7, as follows:

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

DEPARTMENTAL ADMINISTRATION

(RESCISSION)

Of available funds under this head, for budget and program analysis, $7,000; for personnel, finance and management, operations, information resources management, equal opportunity, small and disadvantaged business utilization, and administrative law judges and judicial officer, $42,000; making a total of $49,000, are rescinded pursuant to section 2901 of the Deficit Reduction Act of 1984.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. I there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that Senate amendments numbered 3, 4, 8, 9, 10, 11, 15, 16, 17, 21, 32, 36, 37, 40, 43, 50, 56, 58, 60, 61, 62, 71, 73, 78, 80, 84, 86, 93, 96, 106, 110, 111, 113, 128, 129, 133, 134, 135, 136, 143, 145, 148, 149, 155, 156, 157, 159, 160, 170, 173, 179, 182, 184, 185, 193, 198, 201, 210, 216, 217, 219, 222, 223, 224, 227, 236, 241, 243, 244, 246, 247, 248, 253, 256, 263, 264, 268, 271, 273, 274, 286, 288, 290, 300, 304, 310, 319, 321, 331, 334, 341 be considered enbloc and printed in the RECORD.

□ 1320

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, on my reservation, Mr. Speaker, I would ask does this include amendment No. 262?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, it does not include No. 263, and so far as I know it contains no controversial amendments.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, with that assurance, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

The Federal Communications Commission is authorized to expend such funds as may be required in fiscal years 1986 and 1987 out of appropriations for fiscal years 1986 and 1987 for the Federal Communications Commission, not to exceed $5,000,000, to relocate its Fort Lauderdale, Florida, Monitoring Station within the State of Florida, to include all necessary expenses such as options to purchase land, acquisition of land, leaseback of the present monitoring station pending acquisition and construction of a new monitoring station, architectural and engineering services, construction of a new monitoring station and related facilities, moving expenses, and all other costs associated with the relocation of the monitoring station and personnel.

The Federal Communications Commission shall promptly declare the present monitoring station (including land and structures which will not be relocated) excess to the General Services Administration for disposition. Notwithstanding sections 203 and 204 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended, the General Services Administration shall sell such property and structures on an expedited basis, including provisions for lease-back as required, and shall compensate the Commission from the proceeds of the sale all costs associated with the relocation of the Fort Lauderdale Monitoring Station to another location, not to exceed $5,000,000.

Any excess funds received by the General Services Administration from the sale of the present property, less any funds reimbursed to the Federal Communications Commission, and less normal and reasonable charges by the General Services Administration for costs associated with the sale of the present property, shall be deposited to the general fund of the Treasury.

The authority under this Act with respect to the relocation of the Fort Lauderdale Monitoring Station shall (1) extend through fiscal year 1987, and (2) be in addition to any limits on expenditures for land and structures specified in the Commission's appropriation for fiscal years 1986 and 1987.

Notwithstanding the provisions of the preceding paragraphs under this head regarding relocation of the Fort Lauderdale, Florida, Monitoring Station, the Federal Communications Commission and the General Services Administration shall not take any action pursuant to such paragraphs committing funds for any purpose or disposing of the Federal lands and facilities for such station until the Chairman of the Commission and the General Administrator of the Administration shall (1) jointly prepare and submit to the Committees on Appropriations, the Committee on Energy and Commerce and the Committee on Government Operations of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation and the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate, a letter or other document setting forth in detail provisions and procedures for such acquisition, construction, and disposition which reasonably carry out the provisions of these paragraphs expeditiously, but will not disrupt or defer any programs or regulatory activities of the Commission or adversely affect any employee of the Commission (other than those at the Monitoring Station who may be required to transfer to another location) through the use of appropriations for the Commission in fiscal years 1986 and 1987, and (2) wait a minimum of 30 calendar days for review by such Committees. Any reimbursed funds received by the Commission from the Administration pursuant to these paragraphs shall remain available until expended.

Senate amendment No. 56: Page 12, line 8, after "(INCLUDING" insert "TRANSFER OF FUNDS AND".

(a) Section 44 of the Water Resources Development Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-251; 88 Stat. 12) is amended by—

(1) adding at the end of subsection (a) the following:

"TRACT NUMBER 4

"A tract of land situated in the south half of the southwest quarter of section 29, township 152, north, range 91 west of the fifth principal meridian, Mountrail County, North Dakota, being more particularly described as follows:

"Commencing at the southwest corner of said section 29, thence south 89 degrees 54 minutes 28 seconds east a distance of 1,170 feet, thence north 00 degrees 06 minutes 00 seconds east a distance of 280 feet to a point of beginning, said point being the northwest corner of lot 4, block 5, of Olsons First Addition, thence north 00 degrees 09 minutes 00 seconds east a distance of 480 feet to the northwest corner of lot 4, block 5, Olsons Second Addition, thence south 89 degrees 57 minutes 00 seconds east a distance of 1,468.9 feet, thence south 00 degrees 09 minutes 00 seconds west, along the east line of Olsons Second Addition a distance of 480 feet, to the north line of said Olsons First Addition, thence north 89 degrees 57 minutes 00 seconds west a distance of 1,468.9 feet to a point of beginning. The area herein described contains 16.19 acres, more or less, and is more commonly referred to as 'Olsons Second Addition'." and

(2) striking out paragraph (2) of subsection (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2)(A) Subject to the provisions of subparagraph (B), the lands conveyed pursuant to this section shall be used by the Mountrail County Park Commission, Mountrail County, North Dakota, for public park and recreation purposes. If any lands used for public purposes are ever used for any other purpose, title thereto shall revert to, and become the property of, the United States which shall have the right to immediate entry thereof.

"(B) The park commission may designate a portion of the lands conveyed for leasing of cabin sites. The Mountrail County Park Commission shall reimburse the Federal Government for lands so used as the fair market value for such property.".

(b) The Secretary of the Army is authorized to execute and file an amended deed to reflect the amendements made by this section.

TRANSFER OF FEDERAL TOWNSITES

(a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this Act and notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Army shall transfer, without consideration and without warranty of any kind, all rights, title, and interests of the United States in each of the following described lands (including all improvements on such lands) to the municipal corporation serving the inhabitants of such land as soon as possible after the incorporation of such municipal corporation:

(A) The land referred to as Riverdale, North Dakota, consisting of 892 acres, more or less, as depicted on drawing numbered MGR160-2E1, dated November 10, 1981, on file in the office of the district engineer, United States Army Engineer District, Omaha, Nebraska.

(B) The land referred to as Pickstown, South Dakota, consisting of 393 acres, more or less, as depicted on drawing numbered MR315-2E1, dated November 3, 1981, on file in the office of the district engineer, United States Army Engineer District, Omaha, Nebraska.

(C) The land referred to as Fort Peck, Montana, consisting of 571 acres, more or less, as depicted on drawing numbered MFP118-2E1, dated October 15, 1981, on file in the office of the district engineer, United States Army Engineer District, Omaha, Nebraska (other than lands used by the Western Reserve Area Power Administration of the Department of Energy).

(2)(A) The provisions of paragraph (1) shall not require the Secretary of the Army to transfer any rights, title, or interests of the United States in any lands, or any improvements on lands, that the Secretary of the Army determines must be retained by the United States in order to enable the United States Army Corps of Engineers to carry out the duties and responsibilities of the United States Army Corps of Engineers.

(B) Any determination made under subparagraph (A) with respect to any land which (but for subparagraph (A)) would be transferred to a municipal corporation pursuant to the provisions of paragraph (1) shall be made by the date that is 30 days after the later of—

(i) date on which such municipal corporation is incorporated, or

(ii) the date of enactment of this Act.

Such determinations shall be published in the Federal Register.

(b) None of the lands described in subsection (a) (including improvements on such lands) may be declared to be excess property (within the meaning of section 3(e) of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949).

(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no limitations or restrictions (other than those which arise from rights described in subsection (d)) shall apply to the use or disposition of any land (including any improvements on such land) transferred to a municipal corporation pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a).

(d) Nothing herein shall deprive any person (other than the United States) of any right-of-way, mining claim, grazing permit, water right, or other right or interest such person may have in any land transferred pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a).

(e) Upon the request of any municipal corporation described in subsection (a) the Secretary of the Army shall provide assistance to such municipal corporation—

(1) in appraising the land and improvements transferred to such municipal corporation pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a), and

(2) in completing any subsequent transfers of such lands or improvements by such municipal corporation.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 501. The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the United States Executive Directors of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Development Association, the International Finance Corporation, the Inter-American Development Bank, the International Monetary Fund, the Asian Development Bank, the Inter-American Investment Corporation, the African Development Bank, and the African Development Fund to use the voice and vote of the United States to oppose any assistance by these institutions, using funds appropriated or made available pursuant to this Act or any other Act, for the production of any copper commodity for export or for the financing of the expansion, improvement, or modernization of copper mining, smelting, and refining capacity.

SEC. 502. (a) United States active participation in international financial institution activity is based on our national objective of furthering the economic and social development of the nations of the world, in particular the developing nations. The attainment of this national objective is most effectively realized through a world economic and financial system which is both free and stable. Therefore, it is the intent of the United States Congress that United States financial assistance to the international financial institutions should be primarily directed to those projects that would not generate excess commodity supplies in world markets, displace private investment initiatives or foster depatures from a market-oriented economy.

(b) The Secretary of the Treasury shall instruct the representatives of the United States to the international financial institutions described in subsection (d) to take into account in their review of loans, credits, or other utilization of the resources of their respective institutions, the effect that country adjustment programs would have upon individual industry sectors and international commodity markets in order to—

(1) minimize any projected adverse impacts on such sector or markets of making such loans, credits, or utilization of resources; and

(2) avoid whenever possible government subsidization of production and exports of international commodities without regard to economic conditions in the markets for such commodities.

(c) More specifically, the following criteria should be considered as a basis for a vote by the respective United States Executive Director to each of the international financial institutions described in subsection (d) against a project proposal involving the creation of new capacity or the expansion, improvement, or modification of mining, smelting, refining, and fabricating of minerals and metal products:

(1) Analysis shows that the risks, returns, and incentives of a project are such that it could be financed at reasonable terms by commercial lending services.

(2) Analysis by the Bureau of Mines indicates that surplus capacity in the industry for the primary product of the defined project would exist over half the period of the economic life of the project because of projected world demand and capacity conditions.

(3) United States imports of the commodity constitute less than 50 percent of the domestic production of the primary product in those cases where the United States is the substantial producer of such commodities.

(d) The international financial institutions referred to in subsections (a) and (b) are the International Monetary Fund, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, the International Development Association, the Inter-American Development Bank, the Asian Development Bank, and the African Development Bank.

TITLE V

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE PLAN FOR DRUG-INTERDICTION PROGRAM

SEC. 501. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the drug trafficking problem continues to plague the United States and our national security interests;

(2) the effort to halt the flow of drugs into the United States is one of this Nation's most pressing problems;

(3) the Armed Forces of the United States can make a substantial and unique contribution to the drug interdiction efforts of the United States;

(4) in 1981, Congress enacted chapter 18 of title 10, United States Code, which permitted certain military support to civilian drug interdiction programs; and

(5) the Congress has consistently supported efforts of the military in supporting the drug interdiction programs of civilian agencies within the confines of the Posse Comitatus Act (18 U.S.C. 1385).

(b) Not later than December 31, 1985, the Secretary of Defense shall submit a report, which has been developed in conjunction with the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to the Appropriations and Armed Services Committees of the House of Representatives and the Senate with regard to the role of the Department of Defense in the drug interdiction and law enforcement activities of the United States. Such report shall address:

(1) the roles, mission, and organization of the Department of Defense efforts within the overall drug interdiction and law enforcement programs of the United States;

(2) the relationship of the Department of Defense to the civilian departments and agencies of the United States Government involved in drug interdiction and law enforcement efforts;

(3) the estimated cost of the Department of Defense participation in this program;

(4) any appropriate military assistance, training and equipment which should be provided for drug interdiction purposes to governments in Central and South America.

(c) Nothing in this title shall authorize the Department of Defense to engage in any activities in support of drug interdiction or law enforcement activities not authorized by law.

(d) Not later than December 31, 1985, the President shall report to the Congress as to how the United States Government is organized to interdict drugs and enforce the drug laws of the United States, including a detailed description of the jurisdiction and responsibilities of the Department of Defense and all other relevant departments and agencies and the mechanisms for coordinating the policy and operational control of the elements of each agency in the drug interdiction and law enforcement mission.

For an additional amount for a grant for the establishment of a clinical program to supplement the services of local Legal Services grantees at Drake University School of Law in Des Moines, Iowa, $4,000,000, to remain available until expended.

The purpose of the above grants is to fund two University Centers which will provide legal clinics to supplement the civil legal services of Legal Services Corporation grantees, demonstrate how such legal clinics can be operated to benefit both law students and recipients, and conduct continuing legal education courses and seminars to encourage and prepare practicing attorneys for pro bono services. Under each such clinical program, no recipient shall receive legal services who would be disqualified by law or regulation from receiving such service from a Legal Services Corporation grantee.

$3,000,000 of each such grant shall be available to the governing body of the University to establish an endowment fund to provide income to support such a program on a continuing basis. Such endowment shall be held in a trust which dedicates the income exclusively to fulfilling the purposes above stated and shall be subject to audit by the General Accounting Office for the sole purpose of determining that all funds have been accounted for or used for such purposes. If either such grantee elects to discontinue the program established under this section, the corpus of the endowment trust shall revert to the Treasury of the United States and the document accepting the grant shall provide for such reversion.

The balance of the funds in each grant shall be made available to the grantee for facilities, equipment, and other costs actually incurred in establishing such a clinical program, and the application for the grant shall require only such information and supporting material as is reasonably necessary to assure that such funds will be used exclusively for the purposes described herein.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

For an additional amount for the prosecution of river and harbor, flood control, shore protection, and related projects authorized by laws; and detailed studies, and plans and specifications, of projects (including those for development with participation or under consideration for participation by State, local governments, or private groups) authorized or made available for selection by law (but such studies shall not constitute a commitment of the Government to construction), to remain available until expended, $48,000,000 for "Construction, general" and $800,000 for "Flood control, Mississippi River and Tributaries, Arkansas, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, and Tennessee"; of which $7,800,000 shall be derived from the Inland Waterways Trust Fund; except that the Secretary of the Army acting through the Chief of Engineers is authorized and directed to proceed with planning, design, engineering, and construction of the following projects substantially in accordance with the individual report describing such project as reflected in the Joint Explanatory Statement of the Committee of Conference accompanying the Conference Report for H.R. 2577: Ardsley, New York; Atchafalaya Basin Floodway System, Louisiana; Baltimore Harbor and Channels, Maryland and Virginia; Barnegat Inlet, New Jersey: Bassett Creek, Minnesota; Bonneville Navigation Lock, Oregon and Washington; Clear Creek, Texas; Cleveland Harbor, Ohio; Colorado River and tributaries, Boggy Creek at Austin, Texas; Cowanesque Lake Modification, Pennsylvania; Dade County, Florida (north of Haulover Beach Park); Des Moines Recreational River and Greenbelt, Iowa; Eight Mile Creek, Arkansas; Ellicott Creek, New York; Fairfield Vicinity Streams, California; Freeport Harbor, including relocation of North Jetty, Texas; Gallipolis Locks and Dams, Ohio and West Virginia; Geneva-on-the-Lake, Ohio; Gulfport Harbor, Mississippi; Jonesport Harbor, Maine; Kahoma Stream, Hawaii; Kill Van Kull Channel, Newark Bay Channel, New York and New Jersey; Liberty State Park Levee and Seawall, New Jersey; Little Dell Lake, Utah; Lock and Dam 26, Illinois and Missouri (Second Lock), including environmental management along the Upper Mississippi River Basin; Merced County Streams, California; Mississippi River Ship Channel, Gulf to Baton Rouge, Louisiana; Missouri National Recreational River, Nebraska and South Dakota; Mobile Harbor, Alabama; Moriches Inlet, New York; Norfolk Harbor, Virginia; Parker Lake, Oklahoma; Pearl River, Slidell, St. Tammany Parish, Louisiana; Port Ontario Harbor, New York; Richmond Harbor, California; Richmond local protection project, Virginia; Sacramento River Deep Water Ship Channel, California; Savannah Harbor Widening, Georgia; Tampa Harbor Branch Channels, including East Bay Channel maintenance, Florida; Virginia Beach Streams, Canal No. 2, Virginia; William Bacon Oliver Lock and Dam, Alabama; Provided, That none of the funds herein appropriated may be expended to undertake such projects except under terms and conditions acceptable to the Secretary of the Army, (or under terms and conditions provided for in subsequent legislation when enacted into law) as shall be set forth in binding agreements with non-Federal entities desiring to participate in project construction. Each such agreement shall include a statement that the non-Federal entities are capable of and willing to participate in project cost-sharing and financing in accordance with terms of the agreement. At such time as the secretary has executed a formal binding agreement and has determined that the non-Federal entities' financing plan demostrates a reasonable likelihood of the non-Federal entities' ability to satisfy the terms and conditions of the agreement, the Secretary shall initiate construction at a project in accordance with such agreement: Provded further, That the funds appropriated herein shall lapse on June 30, 1986, if the agreement required herein for that project has not been executed: Provided further, That where construction of a comprehensive project for flood control and improvement of a multistate region described in this paragraph has commenced prior to the date of enactment of this Act, new or additional non-Federal cost-sharing shall not be required for any part of such comprehensive project, and where construction of such a project has begun prior to the date of enactment of this Act, all elements or features of the comprehensive project shall be considered to be part of that project: Provided further, That the initiation of inland waterways projects identified for a planning, design, engineering, and construction in this Act may be funded from sums available in the Inland Waterways Trust Fund, established by the Inland Waterways Revenue Act of 1978 (title II of Public Law 95-502) notwithstanding the second sentence of section 204 of such Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may require.

I understand there is some controversy about this.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that 30 minutes will be allotted the Chairman, and then 30 minutes to the minority. Is that correct?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the Chair.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say to my colleagues, as we are all aware there has been an insistence on the part of the Office of Management and Budget and the executive branch that there be some local contribution. The subcommittee has tried to work this matter out where we can all live with it, and that is what they have tried, to work it out where they can live with it.

I in turn have tried to see that where provisions are already made for authorizing a particular activity that it could not be reauthorized.

I understand there is opposition to what we have recommended, and I repeat, as I said earlier, there are no finer or abler people in the Congress than the members of the authorizing Committee on Public Works and Transportation. We have waited 15 years trying to help them every way we could to get an authorization through Congress.

When we read how much damage has been done by floods, what the situation is with reference to rivers and harbors, what the situation is nationally, we felt that now was the time we had to go ahead and work with them to get an authorization.

So I want to say again we are not working against the legislative committee. I asked the subcommittee on our side, the Subcommittee on Appropriations to work with our colleagues on the other side. I said earlier in my remarks that the chairman of the committee, the chairman of the subcommittee on the authorizing committee, I know of no two people who have been nicer or more cooperative with me. But I do say when our country has waited 15 years to pay proper attention to the needs of our country, it is time we get together. It is on that basis that I have approached this. The fact that some of our friends are unhappy, I can appreciate their feelings, but I do believe if we can carry this through, working together, that we in turn will break this deadlock to where they can go ahead and authorize as they have tried to do throughout the years. So with that statement, I just want you to know we are doing the best we can in the direction in which we believe we have to go in the situation we face today. The same situation exists in many other areas.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] has consumed 3 minutes.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for yielding this time.

Mr. Speaker, today the Committee on Public Works and Transportation is asking the House to vote against the motion to recede to the Senate on section 112 of the conference report H.R. 2577, the supplemental appropriations bill. We are asking you instead to support an amendment that this committee will offer that will preserve the integrity of this body.

I recognize that this issue is very technical but it is also one of the most important we will vote on this year. It touches not just on the question of which water projects will be funded. What are really at stake are the procedures of this House, the rights and prerogatives of this body and the function of the Congress as a coequal branch of Government.

H.R. 2577 would give us a piecemeal, haphazard approach to water policy. Instead of allowing the authorizing committee to review the entire range of projects that have been waiting for funding since 1976, only those projects agreed to by the other body and the administration will be permitted to go forward. That kind of piecemeal approach in an appropriations bill would virtually destroy any chance of passage of a major water policy bill such as H.R. 6 that has already been voted out by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. The Subcommittee on Water Resources spent 3 years reviewing all projects that previously been authorized before deciding to reauthorize almost 300.

The subcommittee also did a painstaking review of hundreds of new projects. If the motion to recede to the Senate is approved, there will be no water policy bill. Many other needed projects would not be funded because a few other projects already received their money. In H.R. 2577, six projects would receive 55 percent of the funds. The other 35 projects get the rest. It is even more unfair that seven States, either the whole State or part of the State, are exempted from the cost-sharing provisions imposed on the rest of the country.

If the Senate language were offered in the House, it would be subject to a point of order as legislation on an appropriations bill. The authorizing committees and the Members of this body cannot allow the appropriations to be used as a means of circumventing the rules of the House. If we allow this to happen, there will be no limit to the circumventing of the authorizing committees. There would be no need for the authorizing process.

The Senate language that we are being asked to approve sets a dangerous precedent from a procedural point of view. But, in terms of substance, it is simply bad policy. This agreement should be defeated solely on its merits, or rather, demerits.

First, this language removes the Congress from any say in the cost-sharing for these 21 projects. Approval of cost-sharing policy has traditionally been a function of Congress. Yet this agreement would allow the executive branch to reach individual agreements on cost sharing for each of these 21 projects. It gives the administration a club to threaten any local officials who won't come up with the right amount of cash. If no agreement is reached by May 1986, the money lapses. Local officials will be faced with negotiating with the administration and being threatened with a loss of funds if they don't reach an agreement by May 1986.

Second, the agreement provides Federal funds for projects in local areas that have the money to pay the non-Federal share. In other words, those rich communities that can meet OMB's asking price will get their projects. For those communities that can't afford the bargain, there won't be any projects.

This is a bad way to legislate. The program review should be done by the authorizing committee in this body. We should not allow ourselves to be dictated to by the Senate and the administration. We should demand the right to a full policy review by the authorizing committee.

I ask my colleagues to vote "no" on the motion to recede to the Senate. The Senate language is bad procedure and bad policy. It should be defeated.

If this House decides to defeat the motion to recede and concur with the Senate amendments, the Committee on Public Works and Transportation will then offer an amendment that will include the same projects as in the conference report. But our amendment will prohibit any appropriation unless each of these projects receive authorization with language setting the proper non-Federal share of the cost. This will be done as part of an overall review of Federal water policy.

I ask my colleagues to support the Committee on Public Works and Transportation. Our substitute motion is the only way to protect the jurisdiction of the authorizing committees in this body, the responsibilities of the House in setting national policy and the role of the Congress in approving legislation.

I ask you to vote no on the motion by the gentleman from Mississippi and then to support the substitute motion.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself one-half minute.

May I say 15 years is a long time to wait to get an authorization bill through, through no fault of our friends on the legislative committee. That means there is very little reason to believe that without some change in approach we can expect anything in the future. I believe it will help their cause and ours for us to join together here and proceed to show for the public works needs of our country.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on that?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the chairman that I can agree it has been a long time. But one of the reasons we have had difficulty in having an authorizing bill become law is because so often the Committee on Appropriations short-circuits their projects and authorizes an appropriation bill for certain projects, which takes away a certain amount of clout we may have in having a bill for all the Members of the House.

Mr. WHITTEN. That always happened after we waited and waited, through no fault of the gentleman from New Jersey or our other colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL], chairman of the subcommittee that deals in detail with this overall problem.

Mr. BEVILL. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the conferees put in a lot of time in working out these differences and I want to say at the outset, and Chairman WHITTEN made this very clear, I think, that we regret that we are differing with the Committee on Public Works and Transportation because we have worked closer with the Public Works Authorization Committee than probably any subcommittee in this Congress and we do appreciate them. They have passed H.R. 6, which is one of the best bills ever put together by the Public Works Committee, in my judgment, because they have set out these formulas for cost-sharing and other important issues.

Now my good friend Mr. HOWARD has mentioned that we are circumventing the rules. We are operating under the same rules that we were operating under last October when H.R. 6 was added to my chapter of the continuing resolution and passed this House. In that instance we added hundreds of projects, not 21. We are talking about 21 projects here that did not follow the normal procedure to get authorized. The reason is we have been waiting not only for the 14 or 15 years Chairman WHITTEN mentioned, but we have been waiting the last 5 years holding up these projects, saying no new starts. Every time I come to the floor each year I have said "no new starts, the authorization bill is going to be passed next month." This has been going on too long. I think we are going to have to move. We have complied with the rules. We have not violated any rules. I do not hear anybody making a point of order. The Senate added 11 water projects that have not been authorized. We are authorizing them through this conference report. The House bill contains an additional 10 unauthorized projects.

Now Chairman HOWARD, my good friend, and, my colleague Chairman ROE, have put their bill through this House two times already, it is a good bill, but the other body does not move on it. I do not know of one thing that has changed since we went through all the same thing before. It is the same old thing.

On June 6, these unauthorized projects were all knocked out on a point of order here on the floor because H.R. 6 was on its way; it was going to be on the floor the next week. Now this was 8 weeks ago, and this has been going on for 5 years.

So in my judgment, in order to get these projects built, we are going to have to go ahead and use this procedure and it is within the rules of both Houses, and I do not know of any way to do it. If anybody knows anything else we can do to help get these projects authorized, I wish he would speak up, because we have been trying for 5 years now; we have been holding up all new starts.

Mr. ROE and Mr. HOWARD have done their very best and Mr. SNYDER and everyone in that House Public Works authorization committee have worked like Trojans to get these projects authorized; and they are going to get it through the House; nobody is against it. I do not know why they do not bring it on down here; they can pass it this afternoon and send it on over to the other body, but that is as far as it is going to go, if history repeats itself, and I have reason to believe history is going to repeat itself.

Now, let me point this out. It was pointed out here that we are circumventing the rule. This bill specifically says that whatever local participation is required to be had on these projects, will be subject to whatever this Congress decides when H.R. 6 comes to the floor and goes to the White House and is signed.

All they have got to do is just simply pass the authorization bill, send it on over to the other body, get them to pass it, and get the President to sign it.

That is why the other body and this body, through this conference agreement insisted on making this June 30 deadline that they have to work out cost-sharing agreements with the Secretary of the Army. I urge you to support the motion, because we are not violating any rule. The White House is supporting this conference agreement, the Senate is supporting it, and I hope this House supports it.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong, but reluctant, opposition to the motion of the Appropriations Committee chairman to recede and concur with an amendment on amendment No. 112. As I do this, I urge my colleagues to focus on an issue that is of extreme importance to all of us in the House who have been working so long to achieve lasting and meaningful water policy reforms.

Amendment No. 112, if adopted as being suggested by the Appropriations Committee chairman, will provide special appropriations and special cost-sharing for only 41 select Corps of Engineers water projects, more than half of which are unauthorized.

The leadership of the Public Works Committee and others ask you this afternoon to reject the motion to recede in order to allow the language to be amended to permit the bill's appropriations to remain in place but to make the funds being appropriated subject to enactment of necessary authorizing legislation. It is extremely important that you join us in this effort.

Mr. Speaker, there are a host of both substantive and procedural reasons why it is proper—in fact, essential—to oppose the Whitten motion and support the Public Works Committee leadership amendment. Let me just focus, in the little time I have available, on a few of those reasons.

First, I would like to call my colleagues' attention to the fact that the language which the Appropriations Committee would have us adopt completely delegates authority and responsibility for establishing national water policy, particularly cost-sharing policy, from the Congress to the executive branch. It gives complete and unfettered discretion to the Secretary of the Army to adopt whatever cost-sharing—large or small, consistent or not—he can negotiate with project sponsors. Congress is no longer responsible for making national water policy. For the first time, we are walking away from our constitutionally mandated duty to establish the policies of the Nation and are turning them over, entirely without guidance, to the executive branch. I am totally opposed to this approach and I believe everyone of our colleagues should be as well.

Second, it must be understood that, if the Whitten motion is agreed to and the language of amendment No. 112 is not perfected, the efforts we have so long been engaged in, developing for the first time in 15 years an overhauled and reformed national water policy will probably be undercut. You all know how long and in what detail we have worked to perfect H.R. 6. That bill has been reported by the Public Works Committee and is ready for floor action next month. The Senate counterpart bill has also begun to move. We are closer today than we have been at anytime in the past 15 years to finally reaching agreement on necessary water project and water policy authorizing legislation. If the Whitten motion is not defeated and Public Works Committee amendment is not adopted. I believe that we will lose the best opportunity in more than a decade to enact the water policy reforms that are so long overdue.

And this leads me to my last point. If these 41 projects are permitted here today to go forward ahead of the other worthwhile projects in H.R. 6 and ahead of the necessary water policy reforms contained in that bill, then all of you who have interests in H.R. 6 which are not reflected in this supplemental bill—and I would suggest that a majority of our colleagues is in that category—are going to find themselves explaining to their constituents why, once again, Congress failed to authorize the work for flood control, navigation improvement, hurricane protection, water supply, and other purposes that they have been awaiting for so long. If the Whitten motion carries unamended, our chances of ever completing action this Congress on omnibus authorizing legislation will probably be lost. Focus on that fact, and focus on how many of your constituents will once again be left out in the cold because we failed at the final hour to hold the line when it was most essential. I urge my colleagues, in the strongest possible terms, to join us in defeating the Whitten motion and then accepting the Howard/Roe perfecting amendment to amendment No. 112.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr FAZIO].

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the Appropriations Committee's efforts to try to make a breakthrough in a frustrating situation that I am sure impacts every district in the country.

We have been waiting a long time, and I am afraid that we are not home yet, but we are making progress if we move ahead today by putting some pressure on to try to develop a total approach to cost sharing and the development of our water resources across the country.

We are doing, I think, what is really necessary to put the kind of fire behind the Public Works Committee, and I am sure that that fire will be of assistance to the gentlemen who have spoken to you today, because they certainly need the support of all of us, and certainly the members of the Energy and Water Subcommittee of Appropriations are first among those who want to help Mr. HOWARD and Mr. ROE and Mr. STANGELAND and Mr. SNYDER.

These projects go a good way toward meeting some of the needs that our country has. We have a very key group of 12 port development projects here, and they are not just for one region of the country. You may hear that we are regionally oriented in this bill; we are not.

We have Baltimore and Norfolk, New Orleans, Mobile, and Tampa, and Sacramento and Richmond, CA; ports all across the country on every coast. New York, New Jersey, and California, for example—and you hear this is a Southern-oriented bill—have 11 of the 41 projects in this bill. It is a truly national approach. Not all we would like, but a start, an effort, I think, to build support for a comprehensive cost-sharing formula that all of us can stand behind.

I hope that our colleagues throughout the House, throughout all regions of the country, regardless of their committee assignments or their biases between authorizing and appropriating committees, will give us the opportunity to move forward at this time. We certainly will be utilizing this wedge to force the Corps of Engineers and the OMB to work closely with all of us to go even further in the direction we all know we have long neglected—the development of our water resources.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

Mr. ROE. I want to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts for yielding to me.

I only have 6 minutes and probably an hour of things I want to say. But let me tell you something: I think that the Appropriations Committee—they are good people, so are the people in the authorizing committee, they are good people, but what have you been hearing? You have been hearing, "We're taking the lead, we're taking the lead." That is the Appropriations Committee. What do you need a Public Works Committee for? What about your roads and bridges and your clean water? "Oh, well, you don't need that, we're taking the lead."

Now, what about the facts involved? We have not been dragging our feet. The fact remains, ladies and gentlemen, that twice this House passed the water resources bill last year. Twice. We only had one argument—two arguments. The Falmouth Dam and we had the Cross Florida Barge Canal. We solved it. We have resolved that for the Members and satisfactorily for the Members. So that bill is ready to go. We filed a report. We have been negotiating with the four other committees who have joint or partial jurisdiction. We have cleared it up with two of them. We are working on the other two now. We are trying our damnedest to get to the floor with that bill. It is a total fallacious argument to say that the authorization committee has not been doing its job in 15 years. That is total balderdash. It is not the truth and it is not the fact.

This House voted overwhelmingly twice for that issue. This House voted the other day and it struck out, these projects that the Senate put back in. That is a Ponzi scheme. What we are saying is the House does not have any rights at all, that we have to bow over, and the Senate, the other side, decides what we are going to do.

But is it not interesting, my fellow workers, my fellow people? I have to say that when I am talking to my friend from Massachusetts. We talk about orphans of the storm. All of you who do not have a project in this bill are orphans of the storm. Three-quarters of the States in this country get no help at all. None. Some of those projects have been approved for 15 years. They are not considered. Why did we not fight harder for what is right for this House? Where do we have the right to spend $3.2 billion in a half dozen States? I am not opposed to any project in this bill. I have personally written half the projects, the language that is in this bill. That is the fact, and you know it. There has been nobody to come to us, Democrat or Republican alike, who have not shared together. We have worked together, we have written your amendment and we fought for you.

Now it is a question of greed. Greed is the answer here. "It is mine. We have the box of chocolates. This is my bonbon because I am on Appropriations. I take this." We spread it out a little bit around the country, we leave a little bit here, we bring in the votes that we can bring in—and I have got to say what is in my heart to say—and then we defeat what we should be doing in protecting the interests of the House.

For each project that is approved in California, we lose seven, simply because they were not at the table when the "last supper" was being held. That is what the truth of the matter is. When they were passing out the goodies, is really what it amounts to.

So the issue before us is what you fought against us on the other day. You fought with me and you said to me, "BOB ROE, you are wrong," that there ought to be equity and fairness. And fairness was the issue when we talked of the budget situation yesterday. You said to me, "Don't break the budget." We fought back with Mr. PURSELL and others in this House, and we said, "We don't agree, but this part we think you are wrong on."

What about fairness and equity? What about fairness and equity? Do you other Members have the right to go home and say to your people, three-quarters of the States, three-quarters of the Members of this House, three-quarters of the Democrats and Republicans alike, and say, "It was expedient because we caved in to the Senate"? Where are the guts of this House? Why is there not leadership here fighting for what is right for the people of this country? That is what this issue is about.

Yes, I get excited, yes, I say what I think, because you have got to say what you think in this forum because this represents all of the people of the Nation. We are giving up three projects in New Jersey. Who is doing that in the rest of this House? Would you dare do it, because you may lose something? We are giving up those three projects, one in the chairman's district, one in New York and the other in my area. I do not want your project if you are going to do somebody else in. Every person in Illinois and Indiana and every State has a right, they have a right. You are giving this whole cost sharing—they call it a fence. That is what it is, a fence in the finest word they say fence. You are giving it all to the Secretary of the Army.

Do you know, ladies and gentlemen, why some of your projects have been delayed under the Carter administration and under the Reagan administration, both administrations? Do you know why? Because OMB held back on the reports coming in from the Corps of Engineers and they would not release them to the committee. Therefore, if you did not vote certain ways in certain areas you did not get zilch out of either one of those administrations. Is that the way to administer? Is that fair? Is that the way to legislate? That is what it is all about.

We are not mad at JAMIE WHITTEN. He is a prince. I am not mad at TOM BEVILL or anybody else on the Appropriations Committee. They are good people. But they also have to have some conscience, in my point of view. They even waive the section that has to do with the Inland Water Resources Program, and they exempt—and I do not want to bring this up, but I am going to bring it up. There are seven States that are in the Mississippi River Basin. There is no reason, none, that those seven States should be totally exempt in part from any cost sharing.

How are you going to explain that back home? It is not fundamentally fair.

I am not fighting for BOB ROE today, I am not fighting for JIMMY HOWARD nor against anybody else. I am saying the House of Representatives, if you are worth our salt, you ought to be able to go back to that Senate and say, "We disagree." Not that we are disagreeing with the issue of need.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] has expired.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. WATKINS], a member of the subcommittee.

Mr. WATKINS. I thank my chairman for yielding, and I rise in support of the Whitten amendment and also in support of the committee, and I urge all my colleagues that we pass the Whitten amendment and support the committee on this legislation.

I, along with most of the other people, stand in support of the Legislative Committee on this bill. We are anxiously awaiting the legislation to come to the floor. We have passed that legislation in the past. It has gone to the Senate but it has been turned down. And we were threatened by the President that he would veto that particular bill.

I would like for all of my colleagues to know, because my friend from Kentucky mentioned it, I do not think you dilute any clout by passing this legislation. I can assure you that this member, along with every member on the Energy and Water Development Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee, will stand here and be ready to support H.R. 6 when and if it ever gets here. I will not only vote for it but I will work the floor to pass H.R. 6.

There is one other little twist on the reasoning here in the House which I would like to address. Let us not allow the Senate to have what they want without allowing the House to help write the bill. Let us have some say for the House. Let us allow the House to participate in procedure. The other body is writing the language. They are providing the projects they need, but it is up to us to put needed House projects in this legislation. If we do not pass this particular amendment, the Whitten amendment, and support the committee, the House will be rejected. We will not have a voice in the supplemental appropriation bill, a supplemental appropriation bill that today the President supports, today the other body supports, and I ask my colleagues in the House to support today.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STANGELAND], a member of the committee.

Mr. STANGELAND. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

As the ranking Republican member of the Subcommittee on Water Resources of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, I am aware of the tremendous amount of work that Chairman ROE and the other members of our committee have devoted to enactment of comprehensive water resources development authorization legislation. As all of us are far too aware, a water project authorization bill has had a long gestation period. We have not had an omnibus water project bill since 1976, and have not had one that authorizes a number of major projects since 1970. Over the last 3 years, the Committee on Public Works and Transportation has devoted tremendous time and effort to developing a much needed bill. We have had extensive hearings and heard from scores of witnesses. Hundreds of projects were carefully reviewed. In our efforts, we have been sensitive to the needs of all of the Members of this body in a fair and impartial manner.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Oklahoma just made a most eloquent speech as to why we should defeat the Whitten motion and substitute a motion by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD].

We are not concerned about passing H.R. 6 in this House. We passed comprehensive legislation in the last session twice in this House. And the problem and the reasons we are not players in the game is that the other body will not pass the legislation. If you give the other body what they want in an appropriations bill, they will never pass authorizing legislation. The gentleman from Oklahoma can help all he wants to here on the floor of the House, but he cannot help us pass legislation in the other body until he goes home and runs for that body. Hopefully, he will do that some day. Then maybe we can get authorizing legislation over there. But the House has done its work, the authorizing committee has done its work. It is the other body. And if you give them what they are asking for in this bill, authorizing in an appropriations bill, they will never pass an authorizing bill.

□ 1400

Can anyone here, anyone in this body, go home and tell their constituents that in your district, in our State, we will have to pay a cost-sharing formula based on what the Secretary of the Army establishes. We do not know what that is. But in New Orleans, they pay nothing. Is that fair and equitable? Is that justice?

Last year our committee brought comprehensive legislation to the floor of the House. On two separate occasions, this body overwhelmingly approved our efforts. Our inability to enact a bill into law was not due to inaction by the House Public Works Committee. Rather, it was due to the inability of the Senate to take their counterpart bill to the Senate floor.

With this as background, I can well understand the frustration of some of the Members of this House. I can understand the desire by some to throw up their hands and say "we can't get a comprehensive bill, so let's just get whatever we can. Never mind about cost sharing—let the administration decide on the appropriate level of cost sharing." I can understand this frustration, but I cannot agree with it. I cannot agree that the proper course for this body is to walk away from our responsibility to look at all of the country's needs and develop a comprehensive, systematic and, above all, fair water resources development bill. In particular, Mr. Speaker, I can't understand why we should give up when we are so close to resolution of this issue after years of effort.

Within the last 5 weeks, there has been a major development which has increased tremendously the chances of enacting an authorization bill. I speak, of course, of the agreement between the Senate and the administration on appropriate water project cost sharing. This key ingredient has been what was missing before. We now have, in effect, an administration bargaining position. In response, our committee has marked up H.R. 6, the Water Resources Conservation, Development, and Infrastructure Improvement and Rehabilitation Act of 1985. The bill we have developed is virtually identical in scope to the bill which the House passed twice last year. But, Mr. Speaker, what is different this year is that our bill reflects a level of cost sharing that is close to the level acceptable to the Senate and the administration. Our bill is ready to come to the floor as soon as we can resolve one or two issues with other affected committees. Perhaps more importantly, Mr. Speaker, I understand that the Senate will also be ready to take their bill to the floor in the near future.

This is no time to throw up our hands and say it can't be done. It can be done. All that is needed is a little more time and the will of this body. We have to send a signal just like the signal we sent earlier this year during deliberations on the bill we have under consideration today. The signal we sent then was that the House would not cave in. It would continue to stand and insist upon a comprehensive water project bill, a bill that takes care of the water resource needs of the entire Nation rather than the needs of a few members with friends on the Appropriations Committee.

We can send this message with a very simple amendment, an amendment that says only what the rules of the House require—that we will not spend money on projects that have not been authorized by the Congress. That is exactly what the amendment to be offered by the gentleman from New Jersey would do. Therefore, I urge the defeat of the Whitten motion.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PICKLE].

Mr. PICKLE. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from California, [Mr. FAZIO] put his finger on the issue a minute ago when he said we have "a chance to cause a breakthrough of a very frustrating situation." I hope the amendment offered by the chairman, Mr. WHITTEN, is approved. I say so with the deepest respect for the chairmen of the Public Works Committee, Mr. HOWARD, and for Mr. ROE. They have always given me excellent cooperation, and I do not believe any of us think this amendment is an intrusion into their jurisdiction. That is not the intent for me, or anybody in this House.

For 10 years now we have tried to advance some public works projects in the water area. I have a very small project, Boggy Creek in Austin, TX, I have waited and waited and tried everything for nearly 10 years to get this bill approved, but it never works. Let us suppose that we refer this bill back to the Public Works Committee. Do you think they are going to approve another 300 projects? Very likely. Do you think it is going to pass the other other body or be approved by the President? Not on you life. We know that; we have had that experience over and over again.

Do you think that if this question is sent back to committee they would choose 15 or 20 projects? Not likely. Not likely at all. They do not want to make those choices because it is too small a number for so many projects—some 300—which have built up in number. So it is a difficult situation we face. At least the House Appropriation Committee has chosen some projects and advanced a bill. The other body has done the same thing. Together, we have 41 projects. The choice today is you either have 41 projects or you have none. That is it. And very likely you might not have an authorization next year or the next year; I do not know when. I do not know how you are going to get a breakthrough unless you use this appropriation process.

I would think that the Public Works Committee would jump at the chance to approve 41 projects; at least we could have this breakthrough. There is no intent to invade the Public Works Committee jurisdiction, because they have done the best they can. But this stalemate could go on and on and on. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I think it is best that we approve these particular projects. It is an expression that we want to make some advancement.

But the choice is you either have 41 projects or you have none. Many of us have been waiting in the wings for years trying to get the projects. My city has advanced their share of funds and now they are so frustrated, they have almost given up hope. We ought not to let that happen. We ought to keep the faith and advance this bill. Somehow I am still confident we can do it this session of Congress.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, we are here today, unfortunately, discussing an issue that should never have to be discussed. Someone said we should not be here today with this argument, and so true it is. But unfortunately, it has been 5 years since we have had a bill passed out of the authorizing committee, and some of these projects are of such a high priority that in the judgment of your Appropriations Committee, they could not wait any longer.

The chairman of the Public Works Committee and the subcommittee chairman, Mr. ROE, both made statements here that I think it is unfair to say that we are usurping any authority from that committee. There has been no intention of that. To accuse them of dragging their feet, that committee, I think that would be a misstatement also. We have worked together through the years, we are going to continue to do so. To say that when we enact this we are destroying chances for H.R. 6, quite to the contrary.

Our bill, this bill provides that, and I read:

Or under terms and conditions provided for in subsequent legislation when enacted.

In other words, when H.R. 6 passes, those shall be the conditions of cost sharing that will prevail. As has been said by every member of this committee, we will go to this well, we will battle to help you pass H.R. 6 soon after we come back from the August recess, and we will go to the other body and work there. I think the other body is just as unhappy with what we had to put in here, contrary to what has been said here today, as we are. Working in conference with them, they do not like this procedure either. It just has to be.

Another issue here, you say we are going to lose support. Well, it is not going to happen. You say in the letter here, you do not want to give the Corps of Engineers a blank check. No one wants to; we are not. That is why we put the language in here: "That the language of the authorizing committee shall prevail."

You say it is unfair to distinguish 21 unauthorized projects as singled out here. Well, my friends, if I am wrong, correct me. But when this supplemental bill went before the Rules Committee back in June, did not members of the authorizing committee appear before the Rules Committee and ask that H.R. 6 be included in the supplemental? Am I mistaken about that? For almost 300 to be included?

Now we are including this 41. Forty-one is not enough, but we are not going to have the money to fund all of them. We are going to have to make some decisions; that is what the Appropriations Committee is all about.

There has been an argument made today that you voted for the whole conference report, you voted for it but you are going to single this out. You will have the opportunity to vote shortly. Let me tell you: You may be destroying, I do not know what the other body is going to do, but you may be destroying the entire conference report. The other body may not take this up without this language. I do not know what they are going to do; I do not mean to leave a threat. But there is a possibility the other body will not take this up at all if this language is out of it.

Second, they may absolutely refuse and force it back on us again. In any event, it would well wait until after the first of September when we come back before you get these very badly needed programs. Those of you in rural America, CCC, the Commodity Credit Corporation; it cannot wait until September for additional funds. But you may, by voting no on the Whitten amendment, by forcing the CCC to close shop between now and after the August recess.

There are a number of other programs that are in this that you may be putting out of business between now and the first of September. We have already adopted the resolution to adjourn, a recess until September, so that is a foregone conclusion now.

In closing, some of you feel that you are going to cut or save money. I know that some of my conservative friends on the Republican side said, "Well, I am going to vote anytime I can to cut money." If you vote no on the Whitten amendment, you are not saving the first penny. There will not be a penny saved. The money is still there, it will be spent some place. But talk about unauthorized projects. Let me name two or three unauthorized projects that this committee provides for construction to start.

Bonneville Navigation lock in Oregon and Washington State. Very badly needed for navigation on that river. The Gallipolis Lock and Dam, we have heard that for so many years. You are going to stop preconstruction planning, land acquisition in West Virginia and Ohio on the Gallipolis where you have backlogs right now.

Lock and Dam 26, the second lock and dam on the Mississippi River, just above St. Louis. Those of you in farm areas in Nebraska, Iowa, northern Illinois even, and up into the Dakotas, this navigation link is very vital, but you are going to delay action on that second lock and dam where you have now long delays in the fall of the year after harvest.

Norfolk Harbor. For those of you in coal areas, Norfolk Harbor will be the biggest harbor, the only deep port harbor for the big colliers to come into, but it is unauthorized. We can help coal exports, by keeping it in this bill.

The last issue I want to talk about, cost sharing. I do not know what is going to be developed. That is going to be up to the authorizing committee. Something is going to happen. I do not think there is any question about it. If you do support cost sharing, then you better vote for the Whitten amendment.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Louisiana [Mrs. BOGGS], a member of this subcommittee.

Mr. BOGGS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the problem of cost sharing and the Mississippi River and tributaries portion of this amendment.

The project is a national one, not a regional one. The basin is a funnel that drains 41 percent of the continental United States from New York State on the east to Montana on the west. It includes parts of Canada and is the fourth largest drainage basin in the world. It was first authorized in 1928, the flood portion was, in response to the devastation and loss of life of the great flood of 1927 in the Mississippi valley.

In the last 56 years, $3½ billion has been spent by the United States on this project and it is estimated that it has saved $100 billion in the protection of property and of lives. The system stretches from Cape Girardeau, MO, to the Gulf of Mexico.

A flood control project is not built from the bottom up; it is built from the top down. While the main-stem features of the project are substantially complete in the upper reaches of the project, in the lower reaches of it there is only about a 65-percent complete.

It is not our water that comes down through these valleys, Mr. Speaker. It comes south because of clearing, farming and development in the upper reaches of the valley. The locals have always been required to provide substantial costs. They must provide land, easements, and rights-of-way for the levee, as well as the materials to build the levee, and they must maintain the levee once it is completed, something the locals in no other Corps of Engineers project have to do.

It has been estimated that in my own State of Louisiana alone, the local officials have spent $730 million on this flood control project. When we consider that $3½ billion have been spent in Federal funds on the entire project, I believe that we must accept the fact that Louisiana's local share has been significant.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire as to the time remaining on each side?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has 6 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] has 13 minutes remaining.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Whitten amendment, and if I had a chance to, I would rise in support of H.R. 6 because I have supported it, I do support it now. Since I was a member of the distinguished Committee on Public Works back in 1977, I supported an omnibus water project bill which unfortunately, year after year after year, we have been unable to pass through this Congress.

We have been frustrated time and time again and we have been unable to get through both Houses and get on the President's desk a water project bill. So this is another attempt to get some vital projects through. I can tell my colleagues that since 1979, the people of Pearl River and Slidell, St. Tammany Parish, LA, have been flooded three times. Just in 1983 alone, 800 homes were flooded. We had businesses, utilities, bridges, and roads inundated with water, and those people, my constituents, are saying, "It is about time the United States Congress took a position; it is about time they authorized some work; give us some help; try to stop the flooding."

But can we do it? Absolutely not. And is that the fault of the people on the Committee on Public Works? Of course it is not. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] and all the gentlemen who have spoken against this amendment have tried, and have been very helpful in trying, to address the problems confronting these people who are faced with flooding year after year.

The problem is that we cannot get the authorization bill through the Congress.

Now, it might be said that what we have here today is a problem of jurisdiction. It might be said that we shouldn't authorize on an appropriation bill. Let me tell my colleagues that there was not a problem of jurisdiction when we authorized the crime package just a year ago when we voted on the continuing appropriations resolution. There was not a problem of jurisdiction when we authorized the 1985 foreign aid bill in the continuing resolution. There was not a problem of jurisdiction when we authorized veterans and small business and housing programs in the continuing resolution. And we are authorizing the Contra aid right here in this supplemental.

Authorization happens sometimes in appropriations bills only when it is necessary, and these projects are necessary and critical, and we should authorize them.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FAZIO. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from California.

Mr. MILLER of California. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the committee bill.

Today's approval in the House of the conference report on H.R. 2577, the supplemental appropriations for fiscal year 1985, was an important step forward in adopting a rational and consistent financing policy for water resource development projects. I want to compliment Mr. BEVILL and Mr. MYERS for their efforts to address this difficult problem.

Until just recently, cost sharing for water projects was one of the last things to be considered by the Corps of Engineers or the Bureau of Reclamation as plans were made for construction of water projects. Cost sharing was considered important only for other types of public works projects, not for water projects. I have long opposed this view and I have been a strong supporter of realistic cost-sharing proposals. I am glad to see that we are beginning to see an end to opposition to cost sharing.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report also includes language which deals with the execution of cost-sharing agreements by the Secretary of the Interior for Bureau of Reclamation water projects. The language provides that cost-sharing agreements acceptable to the Secretary must be executed prior to the obligation of any construction funds contained in the bill. I support this approach to ensuring realistic cost sharing for Bureau projects. I look forward to the Secretary executing these agreements so that construction on the four Bureau projects in the bill may proceed.

I would like to note that the cost-sharing language for the Bureau projects is identical to that used for Corps of Engineers projects. I strongly support consistent cost-sharing rules for corps and Bureau projects.

The administration's policy is that cost sharing for Bureau projects is determined on a case-by-case basis. Unfortunately, this policy places the Secretary at a disadvantage because he must negotiate each project cost-sharing agreement separately.

The language in H.R. 2577 will not correct these problems. However, I strongly urge the Secretary to consider the 35 percent local share figure as appropriate for irrigation projects of the Bureau of Reclamation.

I believe this is a minimum level of cost sharing which should be provided by local groups interested in securing financial assistance for irrigation projects. If many of the economically questionable projects we are stuck with in 1985 had been subject to sound cost-sharing policies when they were first authorized, we would have avoided many of the controversies we now revisit each year during the appropriations process.

I extend my sincere appreciation to the chairman and ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Energy and Water Development for their leadership.

Mr. FAZIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, the one point that needs to be reiterated here is that the committee has not in any way attempted to prevent the authorizing subcommittee from having its will in the future. This authorization for these projects runs out on the 30th of June of 1986. The cost-sharing arrangements have to be worked out between the local parties and the administration during that timeframe. Should H.R. 6 or some other enactment be sent to the President and signed into law and at any point, whatever cost-sharing formula determined in that bill will take precedence retroactively.

This committee is very, very desirous of not preempting the authorizing committee in its jurisdiction. This is a very sensitive and limited area in which we authorize, and I would certainly hope that Mr. WHITTEN and the committee can be sustained in that very temperate approach.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the real question before us, it seems to me, is not just a jurisdictional dispute between the Appropriations Committee and the authorizing committee, but really is a question of how we want to legislate in public works.

All of us would agree that if we handle matters as the Appropriations Committee suggests, that is, to take a certain set of projects and ram them through on a must-pass appropriations bill, then we substantially reduce the probabilities that we will have a regular public works water bill, such as H.R. 6, can pass. H.R. 6 is the proper way to go, in my judgment. H.R. 6 follows the regular process. It authorizes projects before it funds them, it takes every State and all projects into account. Almost all meritorious projects that have a case made for them have been included in H.R. 6.

We passed the equivalent of H.R. 6 in this House last session. It was the other body that did not act.

And it is precisely the other body which will be less likely to act if we relieve the pressure today by passing some of these projects—skimming the cream as it were—through this process.

Finally, I would remind my colleagues that 21 of the 41 projects are unauthorized. They would suddenly move ahead of the queue, and ahead of the projects many of you have which have been duly authorized.

So if we want to handle water bills through the regular process and take every State and every meritorious project into account, then we should not skim the cream and pass a few of them through on the appropriations process. We should do it through the authorization process.

There is also the question of local cost sharing of water projects, a very important issue. If we agree to Chairman WHITTEN's amendment today, we will in effect be giving a blank check to the Corps of Engineers to determine local cost sharing. That is a very bad precedent for Congress. We should determine cost-sharing formulas and it should be done on a policy basis and not decided ad hoc by the Secretary of the Army through the Corps of Engineers. That would reward the rich communities which can afford to meet the price that the corps may lay down, and penalize the poor communities. And it gives away congressional prerogatives.

Finally, I would say the motion by Chairman WHITTEN would give us a very unbalanced outcome. Of the 41 projects which are included in the Whitten motion, the spending is concentrated in the South and the West. Thirty-five States get nothing.

So if you want to protect the regular authorization process, if you want to keep Congress, policy on local cost sharing, and if you want a regionally balanced spending pattern on water investments, then I urge you to defeat the Whitten amendment.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PETRI].

Mr. PETRI. I thank my colleague from Massachusetts on the Appropriations Committee for yielding this time to me, and I rise in opposition to the Whitten motion to recede and concur in an amendment.

This is more than a dispute between an authorizing committee and the Appropriations Committee, so I would urge all my colleagues who are on authorizing committees to think long and hard before going along and voting yes today, because this will erode the authorizing committees' jurisdictions if we do that.

The important misconception I want to correct that was aired in this debate a bit earlier concerns the prospects of H.R. 6. The fact of the matter is that the leadership of the Committee on Public Works has worked long and hard, and the leadership of the Water Resources Subcommittee on both the majority and minority side has worked long and hard and with enormous good faith to iron out the difficulties that have admittedly stopped progress in the authorization area now for some 10 years.

We are at the point where we are going to get progress and get a bill on the President's desk and get it signed by the administration, a bill that authorizes not just a few, but hundreds of needed projects across this country, and a bill that puts in place finally, after decades of debate, good cost-sharing language that applies to all of the projects that are authorized. If we go ahead in this supplemental vehicle and appropriate for a few projects without having cost-sharing language in place, what we are going to do is to turn over to the Corps of Engineers the power to decide which projects go forward and which projects do not, without the Congress having the ability to do that.

That is going to open the gates for a whole new kind of logrolling and pork barreling around here because when the administration needs a few votes they are going to advance or recede or hold back on a particular project.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDGAR].

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

I rise in opposition to the Whitten amendment and in support of the effort of Mr. HOWARD and Mr. ROE to bring some equity and fairness to the debate on water policy. As we have listened to the debate this afternoon, a great number of the arguments have been based on the procedural unfairness and the process between authorizing and appropriating committees. And we have heard words like "taking the fire out" and "loosening up the pressure" and "not having the force to get an authorization bill." We have also heard it stated that it has been 15 years or 10 years since we have had an authorization bill. How do we know that we are going to get one now? Nothing has changed.

Something very basic has changed, and that is for the first part of those many years there was a great deal of opposition between the environmental community, between those of us who wanted a new process, and those who wanted to keep the process basically the way it was. Because of the bubbling and boiling of that pressure we now are on the verge of a substantive package of proposals embodied in the Roe bill that will be before the House in early September that states very firmly not only cost sharing, which is important, but many other substantive environmental and other concerns. And it includes projects that are much more important, frankly, than some of the projects in this bill. That is not to say that some of the projects are worthy, but I would argue that we should vote down the Whitten amendment on the procedural unfairness, but, more importantly, on the substantive unfairness of this bill.

Let me share this with the Members. This bill, if we go ahead with Mr. WHITTEN's proposal, puts up front, gives a head start, to projects at a tune of about $3.2 billion. That means everyone else's project has to wait.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDGAR] has expired.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDGAR].

Mr. EDGAR. So if we pass this measure, those $3.2 billion will be expended before any of the other projects are put on line.

Second, it throws out all of the important small projects across the country in flood control, in navigation, in other parts of the country. There are 23 States that receive nothing in these proposals.

Third, it will reduce funding for worthy projects that we think will come through the normal authorization process. Let me remind my colleagues that in the 18 States of the Northeast and the Midwest region, we are being asked to pick up the tab for the unauthorized projects in this bill. Seventy-eight percent of the unauthorized first-year money in this bill is spent in the South and West. Sixty-eight percent of the total unauthorized projects are in the South and West.

Let me show you some specifics. The reason you have had so many Members from Louisiana standing on the floor in support of this bill is because Louisiana, with a population of about 4 million people receives $735.6 million worth of projects, all unauthorized, Pennsylvania receives $17.2 million, and Alabama receives $396.6 million worth of projects. The State of New York receives about $40 million of projects.

But more importantly than that, it continues the unfairness regionally of the cost expended on a water policy for this Nation. I would argue with my colleagues that on substantive grounds it is important to get the Roe bill to the floor. If we want to bring pressure, if we want to build a fire under the Roe bill, if we want to not take the heart out of this bill, then I argue that we should vote down the Whitten amendment and then support the authorizing committee in its work.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, I think we have had a very splendid debate this afternoon, and it shows the strong feelings that are held by everyone.

If I may have the attention of the Members, Mr. Speaker, when all is said and done, I want to share with the Members just one quick few minutes of a story that is important to us, I think—and it is a factual one—and then I want to give the details of what I think we are going to do here in voting. We would have solved the problems of water resources legislation last year, we would have resolved that issue—and I know the chairman knows this—except for a Senator from one State, a very powerful Senator from one State.

My dad taught me that if I got elected to Congress and I was one of 435, I spoke for 500,000 people and we were coequals and we came to a consensus on ideas. It was not that one was chairman of this committee or that committee; it was how we could work together to produce something. But one very powerful Senator in the Senate—and I must say this because it is the truth, and I talked to him personally—indicated that if we would do a certain thing, then they would go along with that bill last year. We would not do that certain thing, and that same motivating force is motivating this issue now.

It is remarkable, when we think we are important and we have been elected by our 500,000 people and we love our country and we love our district, and it is very interesting to note the power that comes from certain areas by designation in the hand of the House and in the hand of the Senate that decides that issue and that motivates us, that moves us all. We are not speaking because of the fact we have a chance to speak to something or participate; we either accept it or reject it or we are not at the table to play the game.

Let me close on this point: We are not trying to hurt Alabama or Louisiana or any place else. What is the thing we are going to try to do today if Members will support us and vote down the Whitten amendment? We are going to take the unauthorized projects and the authorized projects and put them back in again, every last one of them. The only thing we are going to do is put a codicil in that is going to say that those that are unauthorized are subject to the authorizing process.

Mr. Speaker, that is all we are going to do. We are not cutting out any money, not taking anything away from anyone.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has expired. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] has 6 minutes remaining.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remainder of my time.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, just because the House approves a proposal, that does not make it law. The Senate is still there, and as far as I know, it has not changed its mind regarding authorization. And may I point out here that to the degree that we could limit this and still get started, we have protected the legislative committee because we say it is all under terms and conditions provided in the subsequent legislation when enacted into law.

Approval by the House does not correct this thing. We still have the same problems. But we do say that when we have legislation, that shall take over.

As was pointed out earlier by the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO], we also provided that this cost sharing shall go on through 1986. If they do not take advantage of it, then it goes back into committee.

May I point out that my friend, the gentleman from New Jersey—and I hold no one in higher regard—says they will authorize 300 projects. We will still in the Appropriations Committee, based on hearings and so forth, have to decide which ones of those to fund.

I met yesterday on the budget resolution. I pointed out that our committee has lived within it. We promote it, we keep the appropriations within it, so if the Public Works Committee authorizes 1,000 projects, we would still have to determine which ones to recommend to the Congress for funding.

Now, there was mention made about the Mississippi River basin. It drains 41 percent of the continental United States, everything exclusive of Alaska and Hawaii. That water showers down on them, and they not only have to put up with it but also pay more of the cost. But the conference report does not single out Mississippi. We say where projects are in existence and already started, they cannot impose new or additional costsharing.

We say they should not have to justify it twice. If it is already under construction and has got its parts set up, we cannot retroactively make them come in. We make it general in nature. I do not think there is any greater example of need.

The Mississippi River basin is the fourth largest river basin in the world. We do not charge the States that send their water down on us, but it does let us go ahead where we have some project already going without destroying it by putting a requirement on a key part that may not yet be completed.

As I pointed out earlier, it has been 15 years since the last major bill authorizing construction of new Corps of Engineers projects was enacted. The conference agreement provides that projects will be constructed under terms and conditions provided for in H.R. 6 or similar legislation when such legislation is enacted.

There are several river basins including the Mississippi. When the overall project has been authorized and work begun, to protect these projects from having to be reauthorized, we provided the following general language:

Where construction of a comprehensive project for flood control and improvement of a multi-state region described in this paragraph has commenced prior to the date of enactment of this Act, new or additional non-Federal cost-sharing shall not be required for any part of such comprehensive project, and where construction of such a project has begun prior to the date of enactment of this Act, all elements or features of the comprehensive project shall be considered to be part of that project.

As an example, the flood control, Mississippi River and tributaries project, authorized in 1928 after the devastating floods of 1927, directed the corps to conduct and develop a comprehensive system for controlling flooding in the Lower Mississippi Valley and includes parts of seven States: Arkansas, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, and Tennessee.

The Mississippi River has the fourth largest drainage basin in the world, exceeded in size only by the watersheds of the Amazon, Congo, and Nile Rivers. It drains 41 percent of 48 continental States of the United States. The basin covers more than 1,245,000 square miles, includes all or parts of 31 States and two Canadian Provinces, and roughly resembles a funnel which has its spout at the Gulf of Mexico. Waters from as far east as the State of New York and as far west as Montana contribute to flows in the lower river.

This comprehensive project provides flood protection for the alluvial valley of the Mississippi River from Cape Girardeau, MO, to the Head of Passes, LA; and for improvement of the Mississippi River for navigation from Cairo, IL, to Baton Rouge, LA. It includes the main river, the basins of the St. Francis, White, Arkansas, Tenas, Red, Yazoo, and Atchafalaya Rivers, the alluvial lands around Lake Pontchartrain, and the tributary streams in western Tennessee and Kentucky.

Mr. Speaker, rainfall from over 40 percent of the land area of the United States, exclusive of Alaska and Hawaii, flows down upon the people of the lower Mississippi Valley. The cost of such protection is beyond their ability to pay, and in all fairness they should not be required to try to pay.

These works are not new projects, rather they are elements and features toward completing a single, comprehensive, overall project. These works were authorized in 1928 as a flood control project. The remaining work is not new, but additional steps toward completing an existing project. Each element is an integral part of the overall project and each is interdependent—one cannot work without the others.

The people of the lower Mississippi River area face an ever growing problem from floods coming down upon them from over 40 percent of the land area of the United States. Failure to finish this project as a complete unit would have a devastating impact on my section of the country.

Increased urbanization in the United States has caused significant changes in hydrologic conditions, as evidenced by higher runoff rates and volumes, and lower ground water tables. The U.S. Department of Agriculture has estimated that between 1967 and 1982 about 900,000 acres of farmland were annually converted to urban or other built-up use. Conversion of forest, woodlands, range, meadows, and wetlands to agriculture, including the shifting of uncultivated or little cultivated pasture and farmland to a more extensively tilled agriculture, also contribute significantly to the velocity, peaking characteristics, and total volume of runoff. Although it is difficult to estimate the total number of acres of forest, grassland, and farmland being paved over annually, or other rapid change in land use affecting runoff, it is quite apparent that over the last decade our country has experienced a huge expansion of paved acreage, including highways, roads, streets, sidewalks, shopping centers, parking lots, and airport runways. This paving over of vast tracts of natural land is continuing unabated. In addition to pavements, huge surfaces of our natural lands have been covered over with buildings and structures of all kinds which serve to shed and quickly divert away any precipitation falling upon them.

The Corps of Engineers program of flood control, and flood, and hurricane damage prevention has cost about $20 billion to date and prevented about $146 billion in damages. Due primarily to the cumulative effects of this program, annual residual flood damages are no longer on a rising curve, although they still remain quite high, averaging $2.1 billion a year over the past decade. In some years, different hydrologic cycles will produce more floods and residual flood damages than in other years. But it is precisely in those years of high and frequent floods, when the higher than average residual flood damages are incurred, that the corps projects—structural, nonstructural, and combinations thereof—generally achieved their greatest benefits in flood damages prevented.

During fiscal years 1983 and 1984 flood damages in the entire United States totaled $7 billion whereas $40 billion in damages were prevented by corps projects. In those same 2 years, the Mississippi River and tributaries project alone prevented an estimated $31 billion in damages. In two seasons, the benefits were nearly nine times the investment in the project over the last half century.

During fiscal years 1983 and 1984, 322 lives were lost and over 51 million acres of land were inundated by floods. Corps studies show that within the lower Mississippi Valley alone about 6 million acres of farmland were flooded in fiscal year 1984.

It is totally unrealistic to expect the citizens of the lower Mississippi Valley to pay new or additional costs to protect themselves from devastating floods coming down on them from over 40 percent of the land area of the United States.

So I say to my dear colleagues—and God bless them, I will be right in there with them—until they get their authorization enacted, let us temporarily do this for about 18 months so we can get started on it. Again, if they authorize all the projects in the world, it is up to our committee to recommend those projects that we can afford under the existing budget. We hope we do a good job.

Now, we also have to get the Senate to approve them, and that is not easy. This time they gave us 341 amendments; 100 of them are legislation and are in violation of House rules. We have done the very best we can.

Let us not go on for another 15 years without starting new, essential projects. This is within the House rules or it would not be here. It says that when we bog down, as we have, we can follow this means of getting a vote and getting some relief.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Members stay with us, and I assure them I will be in the forefront backing my friends, the gentleman from New Jersey, Mr. BOB ROE and Mr. JIM HOWARD. I have done that since I have been here. But if they authorize everything, again we still have to select and recommend.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 170, nays 258, not voting 5, as follows:

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. HOWARD

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion offered by Mr. HOWARD:

Mr. HOWARD moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 112 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

For an additional amount for the prosecution of river and harbor, flood control, shore protection, and related projects authorized by laws; and detailed studies, and plans and specifications, of projects (including those for development with participation or under consideration for participation by State, local governments, or private groups) authorized or made available for selection by law (but such studies shall not constitute a commitment of the Government to construction), to remain available until expended, $48,000,000 for "Construction, general" and $800,000 for "Flood control, Mississippi River and Tributaries, Arkansas, Illinois, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, and Tennessee"; of which $7,800,000 shall be derived from the Inland Waterways Trust Fund; except that the Secretary of the Army acting through the Chief of Engineers is authorized and directed to proceed with planning, design, engineering, and construction of the following projects substantially in accordance with the individual report describing such project as reflected in the Joint Explanatory Statement of the Committee of Conference accompanying the Conference Report for H.R. 2577: Ardsley, New York; Atchafalaya Basin Floodway System, Louisiana; Baltimore Harbor and Channels, Maryland and Virginia; Barnegat Inlet, New Jersey; Bassett Creek, Minnesota; Bonneville Navigation Lock, Oregon and Washington; Clear Creek, Texas; Cleveland Harbor, Ohio; Colorado River and tributaries, Boggy Creek at Austin, Texas; Cowanesque Lake, Pennsylvania; Dade County, Florida (north of Haulover Beach Park); Des Moines Recreational River and Greenbelt, Iowa; Eight Mile Creek, Arkansas; Ellicott Creek, New York; Fairfield Vicinity Streams, California; Freeport Harbor, including relocation of North Jetty, Texas; Gallipolis Locks and Dams, Ohio and West Virginia; Geneve-on-the-Lake, Ohio; Gulfport Harbor, Mississippi; Jonesport Harbor, Maine; Kahoma Stream, Hawaii; Kill Van Kull Channel, Newark Bay Channel, New York and New Jersey; Liberty State Park Levee and Seawall, New Jersey; Little Dell Lake, Utah; Locks and Dam 26, Illinois and Missouri (Second Lock), including environmental management along the Upper Mississippi River Basin; Merced County Streams, California; Mississippi River Ship Channel, Gulf to Baton Rouge, Louisiana; Missouri National Recreational River, Nebraska and South Dakota; Mobile Harbor, Alabama; Moriches Inlet, New York; Norfolk Harbor, Virginia; Parker Lake, Oklahoma; Pearl River, Slidell, St. Tammany Parish, Louisiana; Port Ontario Harbor, New York; Richmond Harbor, California; Richmond local protection project, Virginia; Sacramento River Deep Water Ship Channel, California; Savannah Harbor Widening, Georgia; Tampa Harbor Branch Channels, including East Bay Channel maintenance, Florida; Virginia Beach Streams, Canal No. 2, Virginia; William Bacon Oliver Lock and Dam, Alabama: Provided, That none of the funds herein appropriated may be expended to undertake such projects except under terms and conditions acceptable to the Secretary of the Army (or under terms and conditions provided for in subsequent legislation when enacted into law) as shall be set forth in binding agreements with non-Federal entities desiring to participate in project construction. Each such agreement shall include a statement that the non-Federal entities are capable of and willing to participate in project cost-sharing and financing in accordance with terms of the agreement. At such time as the Secretary has executed a formal binding agreement and has determined that the non-Federal entitles' financing plan demonstrates a reasonable likelihood of the non-Federal entities' ability to satisfy the terms and conditions of the agreement, the Secretary shall initiate construction at a project in accordance with such agreement: Provided further, That the funds appropriated herein shall lapse on June 30, 1986, if the agreement required herein for that project has not been executed: Provided further, That were construction of a comprehensive project for flood control and improvement of a multi-State region described in this paragraph has commenced prior to the date of enactment of this Act, new or additional non-Federal cost-sharing shall not be required for any part of such comprehensive project, and where construction of such a project has begun prior to the date of enactment of this Act, all elements or features of the comprehensive project shall be considered to be part of that project: Provided further, That the initiation of inland waterways projects identified for planning, design, engineering, and construction in this Act may be funded from sums available in the Inland Waterways Trust Fund, established by the Inland Waterways Revenue Act of 1978 (title II of Public Law 95-502) notwithstanding the second sentence of section 204 of such Act. Notwithstanding any other provision of law (including any other provision of this Act), initiation of construction with respect to any project referred to in this paragraph shall be subject to subsequent enactment of legislation specifying the requirements of local cooperation for water resources development projects udner the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army and where appropriate, to enactment of needed authorizing legislation.

Mr. HOWARD (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. GLICKMAN). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I believe we can handle this in a very short time.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE] for an explanation of this motion.

Mr. ROE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, what the motion that the chairman of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation is offering does is very basically simple: We have made it very clear that it is not our desire to be in opposition to a person who has an authorized project or an unauthorized project. That is not our debate here today. All we are simply coming back and saying in our amendment, all the projects that were in the authorized bill of the Appropriations Committee and the unauthorized projects, will be placed back into this motion. the only difference will be that there is a codicil added, a provision added that no funding can be expected on unauthorized projects. That is all we are doing. We are affirming the position of the House which they voted on three or four times. Basically, that is exactly what we are attempting to do. Nobody won today and nobody lost in that vote, if I might use my remaining time. Nobody won and nobody lost because there were not to be any winners or losers. All we are simply trying to do is reaffirm the authority of the House, put our full support behind the Committee on Appropriations and say to the Committee on Appropriations one more time: The House is looking for fairplay, for equity, and for justice. We are not going to quarrel with the Senate, that is not our intent. So I hope that our colleagues can support the amendment of Mr. HOWARD, which would do that one simple thing, and then we can go on and get this job done.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Appropriations Committee, we go along with the amendment as presented. I repeat again, we have been as strong for the authorizing committees as we can be. We expect, as always, to do all we can to help them win out on this because they are right on insisting the authorization go through. I repeat again, our effort was to help and our continued efforts will be to continue to help in any way that we can. We appreciate the feelings of the gentleman from New Jersey and we agree that he should be back in the picture. Again, we welcome his efforts and we expect to stay with him in our efforts to help him.

Mr. HOWARD. The committee and I appreciate the gentleman's statement, and thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I wish to commend the gentleman from New Jersey. We in the minority accept the amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Some of the minority may not accept the amendment. If we can get clarification, possibly we can.

I do not have a copy of what the gentleman's amendment proposes, but what happens to cost sharing in his amendment?

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

Mr. ROE. I thank the chairman for yielding. Under the present circumstances, the cost sharing will revert back to what the existing cost sharing is in existing legislation.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Which is none.

Mr. ROE. No; that is not true, no, no, no, no, no. There is a whole series of cost sharing that is involved in the existing legislation right now; land easements, right of way, 20 percent local participation. All the existing parts of the law remain intact.

When we get into cost sharing, additional adjustment on cost sharing, that will come through the authorizing process.

□ 1500

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Well, if the gentleman will continue to yield, as a practical matter, I think we all will have to recognize, without cost sharing nothing is going to advance, even though they are authorized, until you get H.R. 6 passed, or something, because I do not think we are going to move forward on any of them.

Mr. ROE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROE. I would have to disagree with the distinguished gentleman because projects are moving ahead; construction is under way, under existing authority and existing contracts that exist now.

So nothing is going to stop; what is in there is moving is going to move, until we get an authorizing bill through that puts the proper level of cost sharing into it.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. The only cost sharing, if the gentleman will continue to yield, are historic ones of, like the gentleman says, easements, and these things have been in the law for quite some time, and this is what this administration has been objecting to; they want cost sharing on construction costs. Who will buy land or grant easements without some assistance that the Federal Government is going to put up its share?

Mr. ROE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOWARD. I am happy to yield.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, answering the gentleman's question.

In response to the gentleman, what we have done in H.R. 6, which is going to the Rules Committee in September as you know, we have included cost sharing. We met with Mr. Stockman three or four times, and struck an agreement with them, and we have included the bulk of that agreement in H.R. 6.

The administration knows what we are doing; the Senate knows what we are doing, and we are not that far apart on cost sharing. I do not think there will be a debate when they get to that issue. We will be able to solve that problem.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. It still has to wait for future legislation, though, is what we are saying?

Mr. ROE. Yes, sir.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman such time as he may consume.

Mr. CONTE. I want to ask the chairman if we may have a colloquy.

Mr. Speaker, I ask this of the chairman of the Committee on Public Works, because the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MEYERS] brought up an interesting point.

Now the amendment that we saw earlier, when we asked what amendment you were going to offer, the gentleman left the cost-sharing feature, as put in by the Senate in there. Is that right?

Otherwise, then, the amendment has been changed from the one we saw.

Mr. ROE. If the gentleman would yield, we have not removed any of the sections that the Appropriations Committee, with their work in the Senate, has put in there. They are all in there. We have reinstated the bill, but put the one codicil in that is, that those projects that are not authorized have to go through the authorizing process.

We did not change the cost sharing; we did not change any part of that. We are simply directing our attention to unauthorized projects.

Mr. CONTE. All right. Let me then ask the ranking minority member, is that the case, that you interpret it that way?

Mr. SNYDER. Well, we did not change any of the language that was in the bill, proposed as it was brought to us in the Senate amendment; however, the language that is added to it requires the authorization by the authorization committee of the unauthorized projects. In addition thereto, it puts the money in escrow until the cost-sharing legislation is passed by the Congress.

Mr. CONTE. I have to get this straight. On the one hand, I understand that you did not touch the Senate language in regards to cost sharing.

Mr. SNYDER. That is correct.

Mr. CONTE. On the other hand, the gentleman also says that all of the funds are put in escrow?

Mr. SNYDER. The funds that are appropriated are put in escrow pending the cost-sharing arrangement which will be enacted into law hopefully in H.R. 6.

Mr. CONTE. What happens to the authorized projects?

Mr. SNYDER. The money on the authorized projects goes into the escrow until such time as cost-sharing legislation is adopted.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDGAR].

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this amendment, and if I could clarify for the gentleman from Massachusetts exactly what is happening in this particular provision.

There should be no controversy as to what we are doing, and this amendment has already been accepted by the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

What the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD] has done is simply, in light of the last vote, we have put back into this bill all of the projects both authorized and unauthorized, that we just took out of the bill, but with one sentence.

Let me read the sentence. It says:

> Notwithstanding any other provision of law including any other provision of this Act, initiation of construction with respect to any project referred to in this paragraph shall be subject to subsequent enactment of legislation specifying the requirements of local cooperation for water resource development projects under the jurisdiction of the Department of the Army, and where appropriate, to enactment of needed authorizing legislation.

It simply means the following: This paragraph applies to both authorized and unauthorized projects. For the authorized projects, nothing moves forward until an authorizing bill, including cost sharing is passed and signed. For the unauthorized projects, they have to wait for the authorization bill as well.

It is very simple; it builds a fire under our bill, and that is the will of the House as it relates to the last question.

I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. Well, Mr. Speaker, if that is what it does, then I would not have any problem; but in my colloquy with Mr. SNYDER, he says that the authorized projects are being held up now, until—held in escrow, I think were his exact words—until the Congress enacts H.R. 6.

Mr. EDGAR. I think the explanation is true. The gentleman from Pennsylvania did not write the language here, and I just want to suggest to you gentlemen, it implies to both authorized and unauthorized, and it simply states that those projects that we are restoring will move the day after we sign an authorization bill into law that first has a cost-sharing provision that applies and second, provides for the authorization of the unauthorized projects. I think it is very simple.

Mr. FAZIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDGAR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. FAZIO. In an effort to clarify further, you argued against the adoption of the Whitten amendment because we had 21 unauthorized projects in there.

Mr. EDGAR. That is correct.

Mr. FAZIO. This amendment also reaches back to encompass the 20 authorized projects which would have begun construction, and holds them as well in abeyance.

So there is no project going into construction whether it is authorized or unauthorized, nothing will happen unless H.R. 6 or some other vehicle like it is enacted.

Mr. EDGAR. Let me yield to my chairman for the response.

Mr. ROE. If the gentleman would yield, there is $47 million involved, as I recall the figure in this piece of legislation. That is No. 1.

No. 2, what we have provided for is that the area that was passed by the Appropriations Committee that included the engineering, design, and land acquisition, is not affected by that at all.

What we have done is put a clamp on the situation and say that the legislation, the enabling legislation, has to pass for those unauthorized projects to go ahead.

Let me hit one more point if the gentleman would continue to yield.

Mr. EDGAR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROE. We have passed, in this House, the appropriation bill, the 1986 appropriation bill for water resources projects. These same projects are included in there; $100 million has been allocated to go ahead with those projects; and the Senate is working on the 1986 authorization bill.

There are 2 months in between here that we are talking about, which really is insignificant to the overall program. So there is no money being taken away from anybody.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDGAR. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. As I understand it, anything other than construction can go ahead. For example, a greenbelt can be established——

Mr. ROE. Yes, easements, rights of way——

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. As long as they do not spend any money for construction.

Mr. ROE. Engineering, design work; we specifically excluded that from this amendment. You can go ahead and do that work.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS].

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, in the letter of July 30 that the Committee on Public Works circulated, you promise, if we are successful, we will just strike the unauthorized projects. Many people in this House voted because they were just striking unauthorized projects.

However, a whole new paragraph has been added here, and I quote. You can interpret it however you want to:

Initiation of construction with respect to any project referred to in this paragraph—

Those are the authorized projects—shall be subject to subsequent enactment of legislation specifying requirements of local participation.

And it goes on.

□ 1510

Construction cannot start until we pass H.R. 6, or something similar. Your intentions may be all right. Maybe you want to start. But you cannot. According to language you have added here, which you did not put in your letter that you circulated to everyone, construction cannot start until additional legislation is enacted. But you are getting to those already authorized under previous law. You have changed previous law in an appropriation bill. That is just exactly what you said you were not going to do. But you have actually done that.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. Is the gentleman saying that the amendment as written actually contradicts the letter that was sent out here today?

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. My interpretation, absolutely. And, again, read on page 4 of the amendment, starting on line 15, on down the rest of that page: "initiation of construction with respect to any project referred to in this" bill. Now it is just the authorized, authorized under previous law. "Shall be subject to subsequent enactment of legislation * * *." Subsequent, something in the future. You cannot start authorized until a new law is passed.

Mr. LIVINGSTON. If the gentleman will yield further, where does this leave the Members of the House who had authorized projects in this supplemental who voted against Chairman WHITTEN's motion and the water projects amendment?

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. They have been taken, because they did not see the language. I did not, either. I just finally got it about 2 minutes ago.

Mr. ROE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. ROE. I do not know why we are making this complicated. What we have done to those projects that are in there, we are simply saying that they cannot go ahead unless they are authorized. Now, we are not talking about an authorizing bill. We are talking about a supplemental appropriation bill. That is the issue. You have got $47 million in this bill for these projects. This committee, along with the Appropriations Committee, your committee, joined hand in hand 1 week ago, and you passed the 1986 appropriation bill for Public Works without even a vote. We passed it unanimously, and you have got $100 million in that bill, and you have got every one of these projects that are authorized in that bill. We are not trying to stop anything. We are simply trying to say that for this supplemental appropriation that we are going to put a clamp on that particular part of the bill.

Mr. MYERS of Indiana. That bill has not become law yet, has not passed the other body. This is going to become law, maybe. And you have stopped initial construction any way you read it, until new law is passed, even for those projects previously authorized.

Mr. ROE. You have got your engineering money and you have got your acquisition money, and everything is in there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER] wish to yield time?

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on this question?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. How much time is the gentleman yielding?

Mr. SNYDER. Well, I do not know what he wants. Does the gentleman want a given amount of time?

Mr. KEMP. I just wanted to ask a question.

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman to ask a question. I will stay on my feet.

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, would the chairman of the Public Works Committee clear up a question about those projects that have been authorized? It is not the appropriated funds that is in question. It is whether or not there has to be another authorization. Could the gentleman clear that up for those of us who have projects that are authorized that have cost-sharing agreements? There is great concern, both in our communities as well as on this floor, as to whether or not they will be affected by your amendment.

Mr. ROE. In my judgment—and I think the value of a colloquy on the floor has the same intent—it is the intent of the committee not to deauthorize anything. It is the intent of the committee to simply take those projects that have not been authorized and put a ceiling on them until they are authorized by the authorizing committee. That is all we are trying to do.

Mr. KEMP. I thank the Chair.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Kentucky yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. I would like to make a suggestion in order to straighten this legislation out. A lot of people voted on the Whitten motion under the impression, and that was the debate we had on the floor here, based on Mr. ROE's statement that, "If the Whitten amendment goes down and I offer my amendment, my amendment will only apply to the unauthorized projects." And now we find that there is going to be an escrow for authorized projects as well. I have no projects in here, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows. But if there is an escrow for the authorized projects as well as the unauthorized projects, I think that is unfair.

I am wondering, in good sportsmanship and fairness, if Mr. ROE would accept an amendment on page 4. I know I need unanimous consent. On line 18, page 4, strike out "to subsequent enactment of legislation specifying the requirements of local cooperation for water resources development projects under the jurisdiction of the Department of Army." We could strike that language out. Then we will let this apply only to the unauthorized projects.

Mr. BEVILL. Mr. Speaker, I would object to that. I appreciate what the gentleman is trying to do, but that creates some other problems. Counsel tells me that that does not solve the problem.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LAFALCE. I think what we are attempting to do is to preserve the viability of the authorized projects and also preserve the cost-sharing arrangement. We are also concerned that the subsequent legislation might never come about. Therefore, I ask the gentleman from New Jersey and the gentleman from Massachusetts if they might be interested in an amendment of this nature: On line 18, after "initiation of construction with respect to any project referred to in this paragraph shall be subject to" insert the words "either a cost-sharing arrangement agreed to by the Corps of Engineers or authorized projects or", and then pick up the subsequent enactment of legislation specified.

This way you would be able to proceed with initiation of construction——

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, may I reclaim my time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER] controls the time at this point. The gentleman has requested the time back.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I reclaim my time because we are getting into a debate here. People want unanimous consent to give the corps the authority to make a cost-sharing arrangement. I can tell you out front I am going to object to that, so there is no use going into it any further.

I reserve the balance of my time, and I thank the chairman of the Appropriations Committee and the ranking minority member for accepting the amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. ROE].

Mr. ROE. May I have a dialog with the gentleman from Massachusetts?

We would have no objection of accepting an amendment, just for clarification purposes, that would make it clear that authorized projects are not subject to that prohibition. We would have no problem with that.

Mr. BEVILL. I do object to that because this gets into some other problems and creates problems. So I would object to the amendment. Although I realize what my good friend and colleague is attempting to do, it does create some other problems, so I would object.

Mr. CONTE. You are the expert on this.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EDGAR].

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, I asked for 1 additional minute just simply to bring my colleagues up to date on what we are doing.

We took all of the language that was in the amendment we just defeated and put it back in the bill, with one sentence. And it is true that it concerns both the authorized and unauthorized projects. But its purpose is simply to say that nothing happens unless we move an authorization bill for this emergency supplemental. It does not mean that nothing happens. Because we have already passed an appropriation bill for fiscal year 1986. Nobody is going to go hungry in 1985, in August and September, because of this language. And I would urge my collleagues to support the language as it is presented for us and send it back to the Senate. The message that we are sending to the Senate is that the House of Representatives voted overwhelmingly that they want an authorization bill passed. I urge that we support this language.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALKER) there were—yeas 97, nays 5.

So the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 121: Page 27, strike out lines 6 to 9, inclusive, and insert:

Within available funds, the Secretary of the Army is directed to use $400,000 to operate and maintain additional streambank stabilization structures in accordance with section 707 of Public Law 95-625.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

For an additional amount for "Operation and Maintenance, General", to remain available until expended, $2,600,000 with which the Corps of Engineers is directed to construct recreation facilities (including a recreation lake) at Sepulveda Dam, California.

Within available funds, the Secretary of the Army is directed to use $400,000 to operate and maintain additional streambank stabilization structures in accordance with Section 707 of Public Law 95-625.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 130: Page 31, strike out all after line 10 over to and including line 25 on page 33 and insert:

The Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, is authorized and directed to construct, operate and maintain a sediment retention structure near the confluence of the Toutle and Green Rivers, Washington, with such design features and associated downstream actions as are necessary.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN; moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

The Secretary of the Army, acting through the Chief of Engineers, is authorized and directed to construct, operate, and maintain a sediment retention structure near the confluence of the Toutle and Green Rivers, Washington, with such design features and associated downstream actions as are necessary, in accordance with the Feasibility Report of the Chief of Engineers dated December 1984. The total non-Federal contribution toward payment of project costs shall be as set forth in such report.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement. The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 131: Page 35, after line 4, insert:

Funds appropriated to the United States Army Corps of Engineers in the "Energy and Water Development Appropriations Act, 1985", Public Law 98-360, for the purpose of compensating certain landowners who have experienced damages as a result of drawdown operations of the Libby Dam in Montana shall be expended to evaluate and award compensation for damages of leveed and unleveed tracts of land in Kootenai Flats, Boundary County, Idaho, resulting from power or flood control drawdown operations at Libby Dam, Montana, Provided, That such evaluation and compensation of claims shall be made without regard to historic and expected patterns of erosion which otherwise might have occurred without the dam: Provided further, That all pertinent claims which have been previously denied shall be reinstated and reevaluated in accordance with this standard: Provided further, That compensation paid pursuant to this provision shall not exceed $1,500,000.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 131 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

Funds appropriated to the United States Army Corps of Engineers in the "Energy and Water Development Appropriation Act, 1985", Public Law 98-360, for the purpose of compensating certain landowners who have experienced damages as a result of drawdown operations of the Libby Dam in Montana shall be expended to evaluate and award compensation for erosion or other damages of leveed and unleveed tracts of land in Kootenai Flats, Boundary County, Idaho, resulting from power or flood control drawdown operations at Libby Dam, Montana: Provided, That such evalution and compensation of claims shall be based solely on the drawdown of water from Libby Dam for flood control, power operations, or other authorized purposes: Provided further, That compensation paid pursuant to this provision shall not exceed $1,500,000.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 132: Page 35, strike out all after the line 7 over to and including line 7 on page 36 and insert:

For an additional amount for the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, "Construction program", for the design and construction of the Animas-La Plata Project, Colorado and New Mexico; Buffalo Bill Dam Project, Wyoming; and the Headgate Rock Project, Arizona, to remain available until expended, $14,300,000; of which $1,000,000 shall be available for transfers to the Upper Colorado River Basin Fund as authorized by section 5 of the Act of April 11, 1956 (43 U.S.C. 620d): Provided, That of the total appropriated, the amount for program activities which can be financed by the Reclamation Fund may be derived from that Fund: Provided further, That of the total appropriated, $8,300,000 is appropriated pursuant to the Snyder Act (25 U.S.C. 13), to be expended by the Bureau of Reclamation for the purpose of designing and initiating construction of the Headgate Rock Hydroelectric Project, Arizona: Provided further, That none of the funds herein appropriated may be expended to undertake such projects except under terms and conditions acceptable to the Secretary of the Interior as shall be set forth in binding agreements with those non-Federal entities desiring to participate in project construction. Each such agreement shall include a statement that the non-Federal entities are capable of and willing to participate in project cost-sharing and financing in accordance with terms of the agreement. At such time as the Secretary has executed a formal binding agreement and has determined that the non-Federal entities financing plan demonstrates a reasonable likelihood of the non-Federal interest's ability to satisfy the terms and conditions of the agreement, the Secretary shall transmit the agreement to the Congress: Provided further, That the Secretary shall initiate construction at a project in accordance with such agreement unless a Joint Resolution disapproving such agreement becomes law within ninety calendar days of the receipt of the agreement by Congress. The ninety-day period shall not include days on which either the House of Representatives or the Senate is not in session because of adjournment for more than three consecutive calendar days: Provided further, That the funds appropriated herein shall lapse on June 30, 1986, if the agreement required herein for that project has not been transmitted to Congress: Provided further, That the proviso requiring congressional review shall not apply to any binding agreements on cost-sharing entered into before the date of enactment of this Act, upon certification of the Secretary that the agreements comply with the cost-sharing financing and certification requirements of this section.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 166: Page 56, after line 16, insert:

EMERGENCY FOOD AND SHELTER PROGRAM

There is hereby appropriated $110,000,000 to the Federal Emergency Management Agency, to remain available until September 30, 1986, to carry out an emergency food and shelter program. Notwithstanding any other provision of this or any other Act, such amount shall be made available under the terms and conditions of the following paragraphs:

The Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall, as soon as practicable after enactment of this Act, constitute a national board for the purpose of determining how the program funds are to be distributed to individual localities. The national board shall consist of seven members. The United Way of America, the Salvation Army, the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., the National Conference of Catholic Charities, the Council of Jewish Federations, Inc., the American Red Cross, and the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall each designate a representative to sit on the national board. The representative of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall chair the national board.

Each locality designated by the national board to receive funds shall constitute a local board for the purpose of determining how its funds will be distributed. The local board shall consist, to the extent practicable, of representatives of the same organizations as the national board except that the mayor or appropriate head of government will replace the Federal Emergency Management Agency member.

The Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency shall award a grant for $110,000,000 to the national board within thirty days after enactment of this Act for the purpose of providing emergency food and shelter to needy individuals through private voluntary organizations and through units of local government.

Eligible private voluntary organizations should be nonprofit, have a voluntary board, have an accounting system, and practice nondiscrimination.

Participation in the program should be based upon a private voluntary organization's or unit of local government's ability to deliver emergency food and shelter to needy individuals and such other factors as are determined by the local boards.

Total administrative costs shall not exceed 2 per centum of the total appropriation.

As authorized by the Charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Corporation shall process and distribute surplus food owned or to be purchased by the Corporation under the food distribution and emergency shelter program in cooperation with the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 166 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

EMERGENCY FOOD AND SHELTER PROGRAM

There is hereby appropriated $20,000,000 to the Federal Emergency Management Agency, to remain available until September 30, 1986, to carry out an emergency food and shelter program. Notwithstanding any other provision of this or any other Act, such amount shall be made available under the terms and conditions of the following paragraphs:

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 191. Effective October 1, 1984, the allowance for administrative and clerical assistance of each Senator from the State of Missouri is increased to that allowed Senators from States having a population of five million but less than seven million, the population of said State having exceeded five million inhabitants.

SEC. 192. For each fiscal year (commencing with the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985) there is authorized to be appropriated to the account, within the contingent fund of the Senate, for the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, such funds (which shall be in addition to funds authorized to be so appropriated for other purposes) as may be necessary for the purchase, lease, exchange, maintenance, and operation of vehicles as follows: one for the Vice President, one for the President pro tempore of the Senate, one for the Majority Leader of the Senate, one for the Minority Leader of the Senate, one for the Majority Whip of the Senate, one for the Minority Whip of the Senate, and such number as is needed for carrying mails, and for official use of the offices of the Secretary of the Senate, the Sergeant at Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, the Secretary for the Majority, and the Secretary for the Minority.

SEC. 193. The second sentence of section 107(a) of the Supplemental Appropriations Act, 1979 (Public Law 96-38; 2 U.S.C. 69a) is amended by striking out "Senators and members of their staffs," and inserting in lieu thereof "Senators, Senate officials, or members of the staffs of Senators or Senate officials".

SEC. 194. Section 3(c)(2) under the heading "Administrative Provisions" in the appropriation for the Senate in the Legislative Branch Appropriation Act, 1975 (2 U.S.C. 50(c)(2)) is amended by striking out "$22,550" and inserting in lieu thereof "$30,000" and by striking out "$550" and inserting in lieu thereof "$734".

SEC. 195. (a) Funds authorized to be expended under section 120 of Public Law 97-51 (2 U.S.C. 61g-6) may be used by the Majority or Minority Conference Committee of the Senate, with the approval of the Committee on Rules and Administration, to procure the temporary services (not in excess of one year) or intermittent services of individual consultants, or organizations thereof, to make studies or advise the committee with respect to any matter within its jurisdiction.

(b) Such services in the case of individuals or organizations may be procured by contract as independent contractors, or in the case of individuals, by employment at daily rates of compensation not in excess of the per diem equivalent of the highest gross rate of compensation which may be paid to a regular employee of such committee. Such contracts shall not be subject to the provisions of section 5 of title 41 or any other provision of law requiring advertising.

(c) Any such consultant or organization shall be selected for the Majority or Minority Conference Committee of the Senate by the chairman thereof.

SEC. 196. The chairman of the Majority or Minority Conference Committee of the Senate may, during the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985, at his election, transfer not more than $65,000 from the appropriation account for salaries for the Conference of the Majority and the Conference of the Minority of the Senate, to the account, within the contingent fund of the Senate, from which expenses are payable under section 120 of Public Law 97-51 (2 U.S.C. 61g-6). Any transfer of funds under authority of the preceding sentence shall be made at such time or times as such chairman shall specify in writing to the Senate Disbursing Office. Any funds so transferred by the chairman of the Majority or Minority Conference Committee shall be available for expenditure by such committee in like manner and for the same purposes as are other moneys which are available for expenditure by such committee from the account, within the contingent fund of the Senate, from which expenses are payable under section 120 of Public Law 97-51 (2 U.S.C. 61g-6).

SEC. 197. (a) There is hereby established an account, within the Senate, to be known as the "Representation Allowance Account for the Majority and Minority Leaders". Such Allowance Account shall be used by the Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate to assist them properly to discharge their appropriate responsibilities in the United States to members of foreign legislative bodies and prominent officials of foreign governments and intergovernmental organizations.

(b) Payments authorized to be made under this section shall be paid by the Secretary of the Senate. Of the funds available for expenditure from such Allowance Account for any fiscal year, one-half shall be allotted to the Majority Leader and one-half shall be allotted to the Minority Leader. Amounts paid from such Allowance Account to the Majority or Minority Leader shall be paid to him from his allotment and shall be paid to him only as reimbursement for actual expenses incurred by him and upon certification and documentation of such expenses. Amounts paid to the Majority or Minority Leader pursuant to this section shall not be reported as income and shall not be allowed as a deduction under title 26, United States Code.

(c) There are authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year (commencing with the fiscal year ending September 30, 1985) not more than $20,000 to the Allowance Account established by this section.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 262 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "no funds shall be obligated until the Secretary has made a complete, definitive and binding ruling on the compliance of each state mandatory safety belt use law that has been enacted as of the date of this act with the minimum criteria set forth in Federal Motor Vehicle Safety Standard 208: Provided, That all funds available under this head for the purposes of carrying out a national program to encourage the use of automobile safety belts and passive restraints shall remain available until September 30, 1986: Provided further, That, notwithstanding the immediately preceding proviso, of the funds available under this head for the purposes of carrying out a national program to encourage the use of automobile safety belts and passive restraints, $3,000,000".

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] reserves the right to object, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] reserves a point of order against the motion.

Mr. DINGELL. And the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. And reserves the right to object. The gentleman has reserved the right to object on the reading of the motion.

Mr. DINGELL. I will leave my dear friend that right and ask only that I have it, too, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] is recognized on his reservation.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the ranking member or the chairman for an explanation of this amendment.

I have some reservations about this because, first of all, this House has had a habit in the past of just giving broad powers to all these Secretaries and members of Cabinets where they go out and they promulgate all kinds of rules and regulations far beyond the original intent of the legislation that we passed in this House.

I, for one, am unalterably opposed to mandatory seatbelts or mandatory airbags, and I do not know what this refers to. I do not mind voluntary airbags, I do not mind voluntary seatbelts, but I would like to know whether this is a pro-Ralph Nader amendment, whether this is a proairbag, proseatbelt law, or whether it an anti. Would somebody please explain to me how it got in this legislation?

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, may I make a point of order? I am not sure whether the gentleman from Massachusetts is entitled to reserve the right to object to his own unanimous-consent request.

Mr. CONTE. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] reserved the right to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will indicate that the gentleman from New York has reserved the right to object to the unanimous-consent request that the motion be considered as read. Is the gentleman from Michigan challenging that?

Mr. DINGELL. I simply reserve the same right, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to have my friend from New York be heard.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has also reserved a point of order on the motion itself.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. I thank the gentleman from New York for yielding.

This does neither of the concerns which the gentleman seems to hear about. It simply rescinds the seatbelt money.

Mr. SOLOMON. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL]. I would like to hear from him. I think this appropriately comes before his committee and maybe he could enlighten us. I do not know what it is doing in this bill.

Mr. DINGELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me. I confess myself little able to enlighten this body about this provision except to make an observation that the language referred to is very clearly legislation. It compels the Secretary to make a "complete, definitive, and binding" rule on the compliance of each State mandatory seatbelt use law that has been enacted as of the date of this act with the minimum criteria set forth in the Federal motor vehicle standard 208.

This is something that is not required either in any law of which I am aware, nor is it an appropriate action by the Appropriations Committee.

It goes on to state that all funds available under this provision and last year's continuing resolution, for the purposes of carrying out a national program to encourage the use of automobile safety belts and passive restraints, shall remain available through fiscal year 1986.

Then it says, notwithstanding the immediately preceding proviso, funds under this provision shall be available to carrying out national programs to encourage the use of automotive safety belts and passive restraints.

Our dear friends on the Appropriations Committee appear to have been legislating here and appear to have gone well beyond any existing authority. Beyond that, I cannot assist my good friend from New York, who I commend for raising this point at this time.

At the same time, I want to congratulate Chairman WHITTEN for his holding to the House position in this conference report concerning the Pacific-Intertie which appears at page 51 of the conference report. The House language, which results from the Fazio-Dingell amendment adopted on this floor, was fully explained by us on this floor. The language in the conference report is not in accord with the legislative language adopted by the House.

Mr. SOLOMON. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the gentleman from Michigan if he intends to pursue his point of order, which seems to be well taken in this body?

Mr. DINGELL. If the gentleman will yield further, the answer to that question, I tell my dear friend, is yes.

Mr. SOLOMON. At that point, Mr. Speaker, I certainly have to agree with the gentleman from Michigan, because I think that whether intentionally or unintentionally, the committee is legislating in an appropriation bill and I would hope that we do nothing to enhance the further encouragement of mandatory seatbelts or airbags on the American citizens.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request that the motion be considered as read?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] wish to make his point of order?

Mr. DINGELL. I have no objection to my dear friend making such comments as he deems appropriate and I would raise then my point of order if that meets the approval of my friend.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] reserves a point of order. Does the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN] wish to be heard on his motion?

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say we faced some 100-odd amendments that were legislative in our conference. As a result, those with which we did not differ too much we went along with just to get the conference over with after 3 days of meetings.

If a point of order is made against this amendment, I would like to hear the point of order and then would pass judgment on what to do. I suggest that this is in line with what we would like to do, but if there is objection to it, I would suggest that the point of order be made and that would be prevailing.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. DINGELL. I am prepared to make the point of order, then, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order regarding amendment No. 262. The point of order is that that amendment is nongermane to the Senate amendment and so is violative of the rules of the House relative to this point.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I concede the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi concedes the point of order. The point of order, therefore, is sustained.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House insist on its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 262.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 340 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

TITLE IV

AUTHORIZATION OF ECONOMIC SUPPORT FUND ASSISTANCE FOR JORDAN

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 401. This title may be cited as the "Jordan Supplemental Economic Assistance Authorization Act of 1985".

ECONOMIC SUPPORT FUND

SEC. 402. (a)(1) In addition to funds otherwise available for such purposes for such fiscal year, there are authorized to be appropriated to the President to carry out chapter 4 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, $250,000,000 for the fiscal year 1985, which amount shall be available only for Jordan.

(2) Of the funds authorized to be appropriated by paragraph (1)—

(A) for the fiscal year 1985, $50,000,000 shall be available only for commodity import programs and $30,000,000 shall be available only for project assistance;

(B) for fiscal year 1986, $50,000,000 shall be available only for commodity import programs and $30,000,000 shall be available only for project assistance; and

(C) for the fiscal year 1987, $60,000,000 shall be available only for commodity import programs and $30,000,000 shall be available only for project assistance.

(b) Amounts appropriated to carry out this section are authorized to remain available until September 30, 1987.

POLICY

SEC. 403. (a) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that no foreign military sales financing authorized by this Act may be used to finance the procurement by Jordan of United States advanced aircraft, new air defense weapons systems, or other new advanced military weapons systems, and no notification may be made pursuant to section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act with respect to a proposed sale to Jordan of United States advanced aircraft, new air defense systems, or other new advanced military weapons systems, unless Jordan is publicly committed to the recognition of Israel and to negotiate promptly and directly with Israel under the basic tenets of United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338.

(b) CERTIFICATION.—Any notification made pursuant to section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act with respect to a proposed sale to Jordan of United States advanced aircraft, new air defense systems or other new advanced military weapons, must be accompanied by a Presidential certification of Jordan's public commitment to the recognition of Israel and to negotiate promptly and directly with Israel under the basic tenets of United Nations Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WHITTEN].

The motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the conference report and the several motions was laid on the table.

WAIVING CERTAIN POINTS OF ORDER AGAINST CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3011, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1986

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 240 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 240

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3011) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, all points of order against the following provisions in the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI are hereby waived: beginning on page 2, lines 1 through 21; beginning on page 4, line 6 through page 6, line 19; beginning on page 8, line 10 through page 9, line 10; beginning on page 9, line 16 through page 10, line 2; beginning on page 11, line 11 through page 12, line 8; beginning on page 13, lines 3 through 26; beginning on page 14, lines 19 through 22; beginning on page 16, line 8 through page 17, line 9; beginning on page 26, line 8 through page 27, line 19; beginning on page 41, lines 12 through 21; beginning on page 45, line 20 through the colon on page 50, line 5; beginning after the colon on page 50, line 8 through page 50, line 16; beginning on page 52, line 12 through page 53, line 18; beginning on page 56, line 16 through page 57, line 15; beginning on page 61, line 3 through page 63, line 8; and beginning on page 65, lines 1 through 4; and all points of order against the following provisions in the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 6 of rule XXI are hereby waived: beginning on page 45, line 20 through page 48, line 24; and beginning on page 52, line 12 through page 53, line 18. In any case where this resolution waives points of order against only a portion of a paragraph, a point of order against any other provision in such paragraph may be made only against such provision and not against the entire paragraph. It shall be in order to consider an amendment to the bill printed in the Congressional Record of July 23, 1985, by Representative Sharp of Indiana, if offered by Representative Sharp or Representative Conte of Massachusetts, and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 2 of rule XXI and clause 7 of rule XVI are hereby waived. Said amendment shall not be subject to amendment but shall be debatable for not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a member opposed thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. FROST] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 240 waives certain points of order and provides procedures for the consideration of H.R. 3011, the Department of Interior and related agencies appropriation for fiscal year 1986. The rule does not provide for the consideration of H.R. 3011, since general appropriation bills are privileged; rather, the rule protects specified provisions of the bill against points of order for failure to comply with the provisions of clauses 2 and 6 of rule XXI. Clause 2 of rule XXI prohibits unauthorized appropriations and legislative provisions in a general appropriation bill while clause 6 of rule XXI prohibits reappropriations or transfers in those bills.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution is virtually identical to the rule which was considered and defeated last week, with the exception of the addition of a provision allowing a Synthetic Fuels Corporation amendment. Members of the House, and especially members of the Rules Committee, are well aware of the issues surrounding the defeat of the rule last week. Accordingly, in order that the House may proceed to the consideration of the Department of Interior Appropriation for the coming fiscal year, the Committee on Rules has reported a second rule which makes in order an amendment to the bill which rescinds the funding of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. The rule provides waivers of clause 2, rule XXI and clause 7, rule XVI, the germaneness rule, against the amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 23, 1985 by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP] if the amendment is offered by either Representative SHARP or the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE]. The rule also provides that the amendment is not subject to amendment and is debatable for 1 hour which shall be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed thereto.

Mr. Speaker, the Conte-Sharp amendment, which was fully discussed and debated during the consideration of House Resolution 227 last week, rescinds all appropriations for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation except for $500 million which is to remain in the Energy Security Reserve for administrative expenses; such amounts as may be necessary to liquidate obligations incurred under contracts entered into before the date of enactment of the rescission; and such funds transferred to the Department of Energy from the Energy Security Fund for the clean coal technology reserve.

Mr. Speaker, the specific provisions of the bill for which the waivers of clause 2 and clause 6 of rule XXI are provided and detailed in the rule by page and line. I should note that the waivers provided in the rule are those requested by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. WHITTEN. In large part, the provisions protected by clause 2, rule XXI waivers in the rule are unauthorized appropriations which are at some stage of the legislative process but have yet to be enacted into law. Generally, the granting of these waivers requested by Chairman WHITTEN was not found to be objectionable by the relevant legislative committees. However, in one instance, the authorizing committee, Energy and Commerce, did object to the language proposed to be protected by a waiver of clause 2 of rule XXI. This language, which prohibits the test sale of oil from strategic petroleum reserve, was not protected in the rule by the Committee on Rules in light of the objection raised by the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

However, in order to protect the remainder of this paragraph in the bill, the rule provides that should a point of order be raised against the test sale language, that the point of order may be made only against that language in the paragraph and not against the paragraph as a whole. This provision in the rule leaves the remainder of the paragraph relating to the strategic petroleum reserve protected against points of order under clause 2 of rule XXI.

The paragraphs granted a waiver of clause 2, rule XXI in title I of the bill provide appropriations for a number of agencies involved in activities related to the programs of the Department of the Interior including the Bureau of Land Management; resource management, land acquisition and construction within the United States Fish and Wildlife Service; funds for operations, construction and the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts within the National Park Service; the Geological Survey; and Administration of Territories. Waivers of clause 2, rule XXI in title II are provided for the Youth Conservation Corps within the Forest Service; various programs within the Department of Energy; Indian Health Services within the Department of Health and Human Services; the Smithsonian Institution; the National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities; and the United States Holocaust Memorial Council.

The rule also protects three provisions in title II against points of order against the failure to comply with clause 6 of rule XXI. These provisions are also protected by clause 2, rule XXI waivers. Specifically, the rule protests the clean coal technology reserve and the fossil energy research and development accounts within the Department of Energy because they contain transferred funds and the appropriation for the Indian Health Service within the Department of Health and Human Services because it contains reappropriations.

Mr. Speaker, the rule before the Members contains the same waivers of clauses 2 and 6 of rule XXI against the bill as the rule considered last week. Since the Committee on Rules has now included a provision for the consideration of the Syn Fuels amendment, I would urge my colleagues to adopt the rule so that the House may proceed to the consideration of the Interior appropriation bill.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule.

A rule similar to this except that it did not make in order a synthetic fuels amendment was fully debated on the floor of the House and was defeated by a vote of 179 to 251. I felt as if I had been run over by an elephant and a donkey. I got walloped the last time this was on the floor.

The amendment that is now made in order will, in my opinion, abolish the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. But be that as it may, the House has acted. We need to get down to the business of passing the Interior appropriation.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I urge adoption of the rule.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I have no request for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. BIAGGI). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 408, nays 19, not voting 6, as follows:

Mr. STRANG changed his vote from "yea" to "nay." Messrs. SENSENBRENNER, GUNDERSON, MILLER of Washington, and HOYER changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 3011, Department of Interior and related agencies' appropriations, 1986, which we are about to consider, and that I may be permitted to include tables, charts, and other materials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

JOLIET PRIEST HELD HOSTAGE IN LEBANON SINCE JANUARY 8

(Mr. O'BRIEN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Speaker, January 8, 1985, was the day President Reagan announced the Cabinet shuffle that saw Treasury Secretary Regan swap jobs with White House Chief of Staff Jim Baker.

On January 8, General Motors announced it had formed the Saturn Corp. to build a new U.S. small car and was looking for a site for a large new auto plant.

Illinois Governor Thompson signed legislation requiring Illinois drivers to fasten their seatbelts.

Temperatures in the Chicago area hovered in the midtwenties. Eight inches of snow fell in Chicago Heights.

Hillcrest defeated Joliet West, 64–63, in a high school basketball game.

At 4:30 a.m., January 8, 1985, Mae Mihelich of Joliet, IL, was awakened by a phone call telling her that her brother, Father Lawrence Jenco, had been kidnaped at gunpoint on the streets of Beirut.

Mr. Speaker, today marks the 204th day Father Jenco has been held hostage in Lebanon.

Today is the 502d day of captivity for William Buckley, a Beirut Embassy officer.

The Reverend Benjamin Weir has been held hostage 449 days.

Today is the 137th day of captivity for Terry Anderson, the Associated Press bureau chief in Beirut.

David Jacobsen, director of the American University Hospital, Beirut, has been held hostage 64 days.

Today is the 51st day of captivity for Thomas Sutherland, dean of the American University school of agriculture.

Today also marks the 239th day since the disappearance of Peter Kilburn, the American University librarian.

Mr. Speaker, the Lebanese hostage crisis has dragged on for more than 500 days.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL TO PROHIBIT WAIVERS OF THE BUDGET ACT

(Mr. STRANG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STRANG. Mr. Speaker, here we are, on the eve of a month-long vacation, while the national budget process lies in tatters. We wax eloquent here amidst the ruins; we cry out about how crucial it is to have a budget resolution adopted; blame everyone but ourselves, then, in the heat of the debate and the summer temperatures, merrily say, well, it is not so important that it cannot wait 4 more weeks while we toddle home to extol our own virtues to the electorate. Who are we fooling? Certainly not the people who sent us here to get a job done.

Mr. Speaker, the Congress should be ashamed of itself for not remaining in session until the budget resolution, now long overdue under our own House rules, is adopted. We owe it to the American people. The fact is, we owe $1.8 trillion.

Today I am introducing legislation to prohibit any waiver of the Budget Act which would allow general appropriation bills to be considered absent House and Senate adoption of the first concurrent budget resolution. We established this budget process in 1974 to bring some order to the spend, spend, borrow, borrow binge we were on, but since that time we have treated the process with cavalier contempt. We should either prohibit the end runs—the waivers—around the budget process and put some teeth into it, or scrap it altogether. To do anything else is nothing less than a sham and hocus-pocus for the people we represent.

WHEN A STUDY IS NOT A STUDY

(Mr. ARMEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I understand we will be asked to address the question of comparable worth legislation introduced on the floor of the House. The proponents of the bill keep trying to assure us that this is just a study and that there will be no ramifications. Indeed, in one of their "Dear Colleague" letters, they quoted Mayor Robert Issac of Colorado Springs, CO, who encouraged the Congress of the United States to undertake such a study. And if they do, according to Mr. Issac, "They had better be prepared to either implement it or be able to explain it away to the court," as they were not prepared in Washington State.

THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT'S POLICY OF SELECTIVE MORALITY

(Mr. BIAGGI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last an extraordinary statement was issued by British Foreign Secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe about South Africa. It was extraordinary not because of what it said, but because of the rank hypocrisy associated with it.

Howe called on South Africa to: End its state of emergency, end apartheid which he called abhorrent, release jailed political prisoners, end detention without trial, and start abolition of laws discriminating against blacks.

No one quarrels with any of these points. Yet, one must ask why the double standard? How can Great Britain be so forceful in condemning South Africa when many of the same policies exist in Northern Ireland, which is under their direct rule?

Northern Ireland has been under a state of emergency for more than 10 years. As a result, there is detention without trial and trials without juries. There is also rampant discrimination practiced against the Catholic minority.

There are also political prisoners in Northern Ireland. Some have been jailed for as long as 15 years. They are not being released. In fact, the British Government wants to repeal entirely, the political exception category in their extradition treaty with the United States.

It is time the British Government ended its policy of selective morality and realized that Northern Ireland is their South Africa.

NEVADA'S WILDERNESS BILL

(Mrs. VUCANOVICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Speaker, Nevada is a State of abundant beauty and prosperity, and it is with these themes in mind that I, along with my Nevadan colleagues in the Senate, have introduced a conservative wilderness bill to ensure that balance between the land's beauty and prosperity.

The proposed wilderness areas encompass some 137,000 acres of Nevada's most spectacular topography which are to be set aside for our future generations to enjoy. Choosing these areas was a difficult process considering the many interests involved. Of course, preserving our wilderness lands is of major concern as are the numerous mining and ranching activities which require extensive use and access to the land. Combined with these concerns are the many voices in the State emphasizing that 82 percent of Nevada is already controlled by the Federal Government and to further limit the people's control of their land is a matter of personal importance.

As introduced, Nevada's wilderness bill seeks to emphasize the importance of the land both for its pristine qualities and its economic necessity to miners, ranchers, and entire communities who are tied to the land for their very livelihood.

Wilderness is a very important topic in Nevada for many reasons, and I am pleased to say that Nevada's wilderness bill is a postitive move forward for the State and its people.

CENTRAL FLORIDA ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY

(Mr. McCOLLUM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to commend a valiant and successful effort of private initiative in my home State. As one of only three in the Nation, the Central Florida Zoo has provided an entertaining and educational service to the local community without the assistance of one tax dollar.

On August 10, the Central Florida Zoological Society is celebrating 10 years of serving the community and has paid its own way. Nestled in Sanford, Seminole County, it is one of only three privately owned zoos in the Nation. The 21-acre complex features 530 animals representing 190 species and serves over 100,000 visitors a year. Bengal tigers, Asian elephants and even a hippopotamus stroll the grounds bringing joy to children of all ages.

The zoo has delighted the local population and has received enough encouraging private support from the area that it has embarked on an ambitious growth project. Within the next 5 years, the zoo intends to move to southwest Orlando to a larger area. Moving to Turkey Lake Park, the zoo will increase its acreage 5 times to 100 acres and triple its resident population to 1,500 animals, seeking to serve over 460,000 visitors, all through private initiative and private funding.

The local public supports the Central Florida Zoo many ways. Through admissions and concessions, 85 percent of its operating funds are earned. The remaining 15 percent of its costs are raised by the community through contributions from local businesses and by private citizens. An annual Wild West Auction held in a local hotel features items donated by local businesses and community leaders. The area businesses have been very supportive. Also, each year students, seniors, and others contribute moneys through a membership drive, with the average contribution in the neighborhood of $25. This drive now boasts over 2,000 active members.

When news of the upcoming project broke, many in the area have voiced support. One individual, an 86-year-old gentleman wrote the mayor of Orlando and enclosed a $1,000 check saying, "I'm 86 years old, so the zoo means little to me personally, but children would enjoy it so much." In another noble contribution by a private citizen, an anonymous donor gave $25,000 to the cause.

Private initiatives such as these by members of the community have been the driving force in America which has inspired industries admired and copied the world over. As President Reagan has recently heralded, private initiative can overcome reliance on Government funding for community needs.

In conclusion, I would like to applaud the Central Florida Zoo for providing the community with a valuable resource for the past decade without the use of tax dollars, and commend the community's efforts to keep the zoo successful.

COME THIS FALL, OUR NATIONAL DEBT WILL SURPASS $2 TRILLION

(Mr. CRAIG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Speaker, $2 trillion. Come this fall, our national debt will surpass $2 trillion. We passed the $1 trillion mark only 3 years ago.

So what do we do?

Well, here in Congress we continue to blow smoke about deficit reduction programs that haven't worked before and probably won't in the future. Congress has proven over and over again it will not, or cannot control its spending.

So, again, I am reminding my colleagues that when you really get serious about solving these deficits, the balanced budget amendment is enjoying the 70-percent support of the American people: and is ready to go.

These deficits will not go away on their own and there aren't a lot of options or time left.

Mr. Speaker, this House will have the opportunity to act on this amendment again this fall and there will only be two positions, either you are for or against us.

So, this fall, when you are asked to vote to raise the national debt past the $2 trillion mark, and while you are voting to run the Government by continuing resolution again, and while you are moving to add another $200 billion in deficit to the national debt, you better be ready to have a better reason for opposing the amendment than saying it won't work—the people already know nothing else has.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATION BILL, 1986

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3011), making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to not to exceed 1 hour, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] and myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

The motion was agreed to.

□ 1618

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 3011, with Mr. FOWLER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

□ 1620

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous consent agreement, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to bring to the Committee of the Whole, the Interior and related agencies appropriations bill for fiscal year 1986. The total for the bill as recommended, is $8,261,119,000. The 1986 bill is $315 million below the 1985 level, Mr. Chairman, including the fiscal year 1985 amount appropriated for the strategic petroleum reserve as part of the fiscal year 1984 supplemental.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] proposes to offer an amendment later in the debate in which he says that the bill is above the 1985 level. Our committee contends it is not. We advance-appropriated, upon the request of strategic petroleum reserve officials an amount necessary to construct storage facilities on the grounds that they would be able to save money. That money was properly a part of the 1985 appropriation, and should be considered that in comparing the two totals.

We are not only within the budget that was approved by the House, Mr. Chairman; we are $315 million below the budget figure that was allocated to our subcommittee under section 302(b) of the budget bill that was approved.

Third, the question was asked of us as to whether or not our bill included pay costs. Some of the subcommittees' bills which have come to the floor have proposed postponing until a supplemental bill the question of pay costs. Our pay costs are fully funded in this bill; there are no pay cuts that went to reduce the total amount.

The Budget Committee has taken $4 billion in savings on the contracting-out services. The Appropriations Committee staff was asked to look into that question to see whether that was an actual saving, and the question was asked as to what that impact would be upon the Interior bill.

We have the report of the Appropriations Committee that 73 percent of contracting-out expenses would be expended by the Department of Defense, and the portion that we have of the rest is fairly miniscule when it is divided up among the other 12 bills.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, we exceeded the President's budget for a number of agencies because we thought we had to. For example, the President's budget included no money for the land and water conservation fund. We provided $144 million for Federal acquisitions, and $50 million for States because of the threats of development, the need to protect our national parks, our forests, our public lands, the wetlands and the refuges.

The comparable 1985 figures for the land and water conservation funds were $188 million for Federal funding and $75 million for the States.

In past bills, moratoriums on offshore leasing have aroused contention in the House. All moratoriums have been stricken from this bill except one for the Georges Bank fishing area, which is one of the most important fishing areas off our coasts.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, our subcommittee believes we have acted responsibly; we had 42 full days of hearings in which we heard more than 1,100 witnesses, including 249 Members of Congress who appeared and made requests that our committee take certain actions.

We attended those hearings, and our bill is based on them. Our hearings fill 11 volumes, covering 12,500 pages. We have increased some appropriations; we have decreased appropriations for approximately 88 programs.

All in all, our total bill, the total figure that we arrived at, we say is below the figure for fiscal year 1985.

Mr. Chairman, we urge the House to support our bill. In concluding, Mr. Chairman, I want to express my gratitude to my good friend, RALPH REGULA, the ranking member on the subcommittee, for his tremendous cooperation during the year. He attended the hearings; he made very valuable contributions, he made very valuable suggestions and recommendations in drafting and in marking up the bill, and we are deeply indebted to him.

We also are grateful, too, for other members of our subcommittee; Mr. MURTHA, Mr. DICKS, Mr. AUCOIN, Mr. BOLAND; and we respect and approve of contributions that they made in drafting this bill.

We also are grateful, too, for Mr. LOEFFLER and for Mr. MCDADE, the former ranking member, who knows as much about our bill and about the programs that make it up as any Member of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to bring to the Committee of the Whole the Interior and related agencies appropriation bill for fiscal year 1986. The total for the bill as recommended is $8,261,119,000. When compared with the comparable figure for fiscal year 1985, including the fiscal year 1985 amount appropriated for the strategic petroleum reserve as part of the fiscal year supplemental, the 1986 bill is $315,407,000 below the 1985 level. This means we are actually reducing overall program levels.

The bill reflects our continuing investment in America and the American people. It provides the amounts necessary to support the national heritage of all Americans—the public lands, the national parks, the national forests, and the cultural and historic preservation of the heritage that we want to pass along to our children, our grandchildren, and the generations to come; and to continue the hope and dream that each of us has that what we pass along for our children and the coming generations will be better than what we enjoy now.

The bill provides total appropriations of new budget authority of $8,261,119,000. Although final congressional action has not been completed on the first budget resolution, the amounts recommended in this bill are within the amounts assumed in the House-passed budget resolution pursuant to section 302 of the Budget Act. Not only within but $300 million bolow.

The bill includes $4,151,663,000 for programs of the Department of the Interior; $1,444,698,000 for the U.S. Forest Service; $1,069,939,000 for programs of the Department of Energy; and $1,594,819,000 for Indian health, Indian education, the Smithsonian Institution, the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities, and the other related agencies of the bill, all of which are described in the detail in the report accompanying the bill.

The programs within the bill in many ways represent an investment in America itself, and those investments provide significant returns. For example, programs funded in this bill will generate estimated revenues of over $12 billion in fiscal year 1986.

There are a number of items in this bill which have caused the committee to say the President's budget must be exceeded, in order to continue vital programs to meet established national goals.

For example, there is an increase of $179 million for land acquisition in refuges, parks, national forests, and public lands. This includes $50 million for State assistance program. We could not agree with the administration's request for a 3-year moratorium on land acquisition. Prices would only go higher; critical habitat would be lost; and private landowners inconvenienced. However, the total recommended for land acquisition is $63 million below the 1985 level. The committee has also recommended increases of $205 million in Indian programs, including construction of hospitals, clinics, and schools, irrigation and sanitation facilities, and protection and development of natural resources on reservation lands, in keeping with our trust responsibilities to the Indian people. Again, however, the recommended funding for these programs in fiscal year 1986 is $18 million below the enacted level for fiscal year 1985.

Recognizing the growing importance of the quality of the Nation's water, the committee has recommended a $5 million initiative for beginning a national water quality assessment to be coordinated by the U.S. Geological Survey. Problems with agricultural runoff such as at the Kesterson Wildlife Refuge in California and with toxic waste burial led the committee to make this recommendation.

For energy programs, there are increases of $441 million over the request. This includes additional money for low income weatherization, weatherization of schools and hospitals, and technologies for burning coal in a more efficient, safe manner.

The committee has conditioned the activation of the low-income weatherization performance fund on an appropriation which exceeds the fiscal year 1985 level by at least 5 percent. However, we expect the Department to proceed with all activities necessary to make allocations from the fund as authorized, including a rulemaking to establish a system for measuring superior performance, and implementation of that system.

The committee has also recommended the transfer of $750,000,000 from the funds available to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to the Department of Energy for the clean coal technology reserve established by the 1985 Appropriation Act. These funds will be made available over the next 3 fiscal years for projects that will substantially decrease the environmental impacts of using coal, beginning with $100,000,000 in fiscal year 1986. All projects funded from the reserve will be at least 50 percent cost-shared by private industry.

The committee has included funds to continue construction of capacity for the strategic petroleum reserve and also has placed language in the bill specifying moderate rates of filling the reserve with oil, using previously appropriated funds. This continues the House's policy of refusing to put a moratorium on the reserve, which we established in the fiscal year 1985 supplemental bill.

The bill includes funds for several programs that were proposed for termination in the budget request. For example, the recommendation includes $24,410,000 to continue the historic preservation program, as well as funds for several other programs which the committee, as well as many Members of Congress who contacted us, feel are too important to be terminated.

The committee has continued many programs at the 1985 level, rather than at the reduced level as proposed by the administration. However, we have not disagreed with every administration proposal to reduced costs. The committee has agreed to reduce State energy conservation grants and energy extension service funding by 20 percent. The committee has also agreed to bill language proposed by the administration, under the Minerals Management Service, requiring permittees to provide geological and geophysical data to the Government as a condition of the permit, with the Government paying only the reasonable cost of reproducing such data. Adoption of this policy is estimated to save the Government at least $3,400,000 in fiscal year 1986.

With respect to the Outer Continental Shelf, the bill continues a moratorium only in the North Atlantic-Georges Bank area. Moratoria on offshore leasing in the central, northern, and southern California planning areas were deleted by the committee based on an agreement reached by representatives of the California congressional delegation and the Secretary of the Interior. However, as stated in the July 15, 1985, letter from the Secretary of the Interior, "If, by September, the delegation and I are unable to conclude a final agreement on the issue of the California coast moratoria, representatives of the delegation would be free to seek moratoria when the fiscal year 1986 continuing resolution is considered." It should be noted that the moratorium contained in the bill excludes less than 1 percent of the total acreage available to be leased, and less than 1 percent of the total estimated hydrocarbon resources of the OCS.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill. It continues important programs necessary for the protection and enhancement of our unsurpassed natural resources, while maintaining fiscal reponsibility and providing a substantial return to the Treasury. I urge the adoption of the bill presented to you today.

At this point I would like to insert a table comparing recommended appropriations to the budget estimates and the amounts appropriated in fiscal year 1985, as well as a correction to the printing error which occurred in the table on page 103 of the report (H.R. 99-205).

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself so much time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, and my colleagues, Chairman YATES, as always, has explained this bill very ably. Before I go into the specifics of the bill, I do want to commend the chairman and the staff of the subcommittee for the work they have done to bring this bill to the floor today.

This has been my first year to serve as the ranking Republican on the subcommittee, and the chairman and the staff have gone out of their way to assist me and all of my colleagues on our side of the aisle.

Our views have been heard and taken into account in the bill before us today. It truly was a bipartisan effort. While I have always respected my colleague from Illinois, the chairman of the subcommittee, this year I have had a special opportunity to observe more closely the hard work and dedication he personally brings to his work on the subcommittee, that it has been a great satisfaction to work with him this year, and I want to join him in strongly supporting this bill.

We will most likely hear some talk today about our bill being over the fiscal 1985 level. I disagree with that, and I think the chairman has already pointed out that we are at fiscal year 1985 levels if you compare apples and apples.

Obviously, you can play games with numbers, but in reality if we are using the same set of measuring sticks, we are actually under fiscal year 1985.

This bill represents one of the most important appropriation measures we will consider this year, for it deals with one of the most priceless things that are part of the United States, and that is our natural heritage. Most people do not realize that over one-third of the U.S. land surface is controlled and owned by the U.S. Government, in effect, the people of this Nation.

It is the management of that land resource, and all the minerals that go with it, that is the responsibility of this subcommittee.

In our view, the administration's budget did not provide adequate protection for that resource. For example, after a 4-year, $1 billion effort to rehabilitate the national parks, the administration proposed to reduce maintenance funding by $21,867,000, despite testimony from the Park Service before our subcommittee that the job is far from complete and recommendations of a Park Service task force for substantial increases in the maintenance budget should be kept.

The committee has recommended an increase in maintenance of $22,390,000. Reducing the appropriation for maintenance would merely result in more expensive needs in future fiscal years.

I might point out that in 1984, we had 325 million visitors to the national parks. It is estimated in 1986 that we will have 354 million, an increase of almost 10 percent. Obviously, that puts pressure on safety; it puts pressure on health needs; it puts pressure on camping facilities, it puts pressure on every dimension of the Park Service to meet these needs, and that is what we have addressed, even though the administration wanted to cut it.

I might also point out that the Forest Service, and this is a little-known fact, provides opportunities for recreation in Forest Service lands. Interestingly, Forest Service lands provides 41 percent of the recreation needs of this country; the National Parks 19 percent; and the Bureau of Land Management, 9 percent.

I think it illustrates that this is a comprehensive need in terms of meeting the needs of the people of this Nation for recreation, and what we have attempted to do in a very responsible way is to provide adequate funding, not excessive but adequate funding to deal with the health, and maintenance, and safety needs of those that visit the Forest Service, the national parks and the Bureau of Land Management areas.

The administration's budget also did not request any funds for sanitation facilities in Indian housing, despite a backlog of 20,000 American Indian homes in need of indoor sanitation facilities and 2,900 of these being planned, that is, to be built, without bathroom facilities. Obviously, this is penny wise and pound foolish. Whether you agree or not, we have a statutory responsibility to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and we need to meet that. The committee recommends $25 million for sanitation facilities, the same as 1985. It is not over, but it is at the 1985 level. This would provide service to approximately 3,000 to 3,500 Indian homes. That still does not begin to meet unmet needs.

There are other examples, but my point is we are not talking about esoteric items. In much of this bill we are talking about basic needs in the parks, the forests, the wildlife refuges and our Indian reservations.

In addition to these management responsibilities, in crafting this bill the chairman and I personally reviewed requests, as he mentioned, from 249 of our congressional colleagues, and many of these requests have been addressed in this bill, because Members in a district know what the needs are in terms of parks and forest lands. So we respect their requests insofar as possible.

Getting back to the funding levels in the bill, when you compare the fiscal year 1985 program levels with the levels contained in the bill before us today, we are below last year's levels by some $513 million. Of course, if you take the off budget money for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve, the reduction below 1985 levels is much greater than that.

I think the chairman has covered that pretty well, but let me emphasize again that if you compare apples with apples, we are substantially below fiscal year 1985 levels, and it reflects the fact that we did listen to a lot of testimony, we respected the need to have fiscal responsibility, to hold down the spending as much as possible, given the fact that we are responsible in this bill and we do deal with 729 million acres of U.S. land scattered throughout the country, more in the West and Alaska, obviously, but nevertheless some in all of the States. We also have the Smithsonian, we have the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the Outer Continental Shelf; a wide range of responsibilities.

We also addressed the pay raise issue.

I might just touch one—and I know there will be some other discussion of this—in a recent article in the Los Angeles Times, the headlines said, "Soviet Pacific Fleet Buildup Poses Threat," and they mention in this article a rapid, dramatic expansion of the Soviet fleet in the Pacific.

Now, why do I address that here? The reason is that this bill also has many millions of dollars to meet our responsibilities in the management of the trust territories. Maintaining a U.S. presence, maintaining the responsibilities that were given to this Nation in the post-World War II settlements in terms of trust territories are important. They are important from the standpoint of having those out in the Pacific recognize that the United States does meet its commitments. And that is going to be an influential factor in whatever success the Soviets might have in attempting to lease space at various island bases in the Pacific as they continue their buildup. I think that this was addressed the other day by Congressman MCCAIN from Arizona, who has direct responsibility in his subcommittee with dealing with trust territories.

I would make two last comments in relationship to this bill. No. 1, while we are providing for spending $8.2 billion, the $8.2 billion, generates $12.5 billion in revenues. That is a net of $4 billion to the Treasury. I would suggest this is the only appropriation measure that will have that kind of significant revenue generation, and that illustrates the importance of good management and what we have attempted to do in the bill.

The second and last point I make is that in the matter of the clean coal provisions of this bill, we set up a 50-50 match, as we have also done with the National Endowment for the Arts. We are saying, in effect, let us generate private enterprise, let us generate private activity by saying, in the case of the clean coal technology, the Government will support some of the esoteric programs that we hope will make us energy independent, but we also want the private sector to commit some of their resources, namely, 50 cents for every 50 cents we put in of Federal dollars. Not many programs have this kind of cost sharing. We just had a discussion of that in terms of the water projects.

In the case of the National Endowment for the Arts, for every $130 million that we provide for programmatic activities, an additional $130 million has to be matched by the private sector, so that means that the private sector has to commit to the quality of the project by putting up money in order to generate the Federal moneys.

Also in the National Endowment for the Arts is a provision, another matching provision, for projects that have a 3-to-1 match, so that $21 million we have in that generates $84 million in private dollars.

All in all, I think that this bill is a responsible bill, addressing the management challenges that we have in using the resources of this land of ours carefully and providing a high quality environment, a high quality of life for the people of the United States.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support this bill today.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND].

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the subcommittee which drafted this measure, I want to urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3011.

At the outset, I want to compliment the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], for their work on this bill. Through their leadership and dedication, we have been able to fashion a measure that I believe fairly addresses the disparate needs of the myriad of activities within the subcommittee's jurisdiction. I would also like to thank the members of the subcommittee staff for their hard work and invaluable assistance, without which the preparation of this bill would not have been possible.

Through the passage and enactment of the Interior appropriations bill, the Federal Government addresses some of its most important responsibilities as a steward, a trustee, and conservator. We all realize the budget constraints under which we must operate, and that realization certainly colored our deliberations on the subcommittee. We also realized, however, that there are things we must do each year, to protect the national treasures that are our public lands, and maintain the repositories of our cultural heritage. We do those things in this bill by providing funds for the National Park Service, the Forest Service, and the Bureau of Land Management, as well as the Smithsonian Institution, the National Gallery of Art, and the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities. In addition, the subcommittee was cognizant of the particular duty, that our country owes, to certain groups of people, both in this country and far from our shores. That responsibility is occasioned by the special legal relationship we have with the native American peoples, and the residents of our Atlantic and Pacific territories. Through this bill, we discharge those responsibilities by providing funds to, among other things, construct two high schools for Indian children, build public health centers in American Samoa, complete the construction of a hospital in the northern Mariana Islands, and provide a loan for an airport runway expansion project in the Virgin Islands.

In drafting this year's Interior appropriations bill, the subcommittee had to pay particular attention to programs, that are not as prominent in our discussions in these days of relative energy abundance, programs like energy conservation and the need to develop alternative sources of energy. Today's energy abundance is not permanent, and we must take steps now to make sure that we are prepared for the next period of shortage. We can take those steps by continuing the weatherization program which has made thousands of homes of low-income Americans more energy efficient, by continuing the development of energy saving engines and batteries, and by proceeding with efforts, to make coal liquefaction and gasification techniques available on a commercial scale. All of these programs, as well as many others, are funded through this bill. They are important components of our national effort, to achieve energy self-sufficiency and they deserve to be continued. I hope that the House will endorse all of the subcommittee's efforts in the energy area. I hope that it will reject attempts to cut funding for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation or the clean coal technology reserve, attempts which in my view would not contribute to solving the energy problems which confront us.

Mr. Chairman, like all appropriations bills, H.R. 3011 embodies a number of difficult choices on competing spending priorities. The subcommittee did not do all it wanted to do for the programs within its jurisdiction. We did, however, do what we thought we had to do and what we could afford to do for the coming fiscal year. The bill is a good one. It merits the support of the House.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE].

Mr. MCDADE. Mr. Chairman, I want to first pay my compliments to my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois who has done such an outstanding job with this bill as he has done guiding the committee for many, many years, and to my dear friend from Ohio, Congressman REGULA, who has always left an imprint every time we have met on this bill. His maiden voyage, if you will, as manager of the bill on this side shows him doing an excellent job.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3011, making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies, and urge its overwhelming approval by the Members of this House. Let me say that it has been my privilege to have served on this subcommittee for over 20 years—and I can say without reservation that this is a fine bill.

This is a bill that advances the cause of protection and preservation of our Nation's precious natural resources, our cultural resources and our energy resources—a most unique and awesome responsibility.

As always, I commend Chairman SID YATES and the new ranking member, my good friend, RALPH REGULA, for their skill and leadership in guiding this bill through the long arduous committee process. They have both conducted our deliberations in a fair and courteous manner so that all of us have had the opportunity to help shape the broad outlines of the bill that is before you today.

Specifically, the bill provides $8.3 billion in new budget authority and although there are differences of opinion over totals, it is important to note that this bill is estimated to generate over $12 billion in revenues in fiscal year 1986 alone.

This bill provides our Nation with a responsible energy research program and increases our national security by providing funds to continue construction of storage capacity for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve and maintain a consistent fill rate using previously appropriated funds. This is an insurance policy, we believe, against future world oil disruptions.

There are some who will shout that these energy programs are $400 million over the budget request. On closer examination you can see that the committee funded such critical programs as low income weatherization, weatherization of schools and hospitals and research to find technologies for burning coal in a more efficient, safer manner. These are programs which were drastically cut or eliminated in early budget recommendations.

Of particular importance to me is the transfer of $750,000,000 from the Synthetic Fuel Corporation to the Department of Energy for a Clean Coal Technology Reserve—established by the 1985 Appropriations Act. These funds will be made available over the next 3 fiscal years for projects that will substantially decrease the environmental impact of using coal—our Nation's most abundant natural fuel. Of notable importance are the committee's criteria, which include a mandatory 50-percent, cost-sharing arrangement with private industry.

This bill responsibly addresses our stewardship commitments to protect and preserve our Nation's precious public lands and waters by providing increases in excess of $179 million for land acquisition for refuges, parks and national forests, as well as funds for State assistance programs. To improve water quality, $5 million was included for initiating a national water quality assessment to be coordinated by the U.S. Geological Survey. The agricultural runoff stituation at the Kesterson Wildlife Refuge in California earlier this year prompted this action.

We funded programs administered by the Bureau of Land Management responsible for the multiple use of over 300 million acres onshore, 370 million in subsurface mineral rights—the Fish and Wildlife Service which manages over 90 million acres of refuges, fishery research centers and waterfowl production areas—the National Park Service System covering 80 million acres—visited by nearly 400 million individuals annually and the National Forest Service with 191 million acres of timber production, forestry research programs, grazing and recreational lands.

I could hardly speak of protecting and preserving our public lands without mentioning an element within Interior called the Office of Surface Mining. This agency is charged with the task of enforcement of the 1977 Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act. I was heartened to see the restoration of $100 million to the Abandoned Mine Reclamation Fund for State Grants which are used to address the most hazardous health and safety problems associated with reckless, irresponsible mining practices. Pennsylvania alone has nearly $15 billion of abandoned mine work remaining to be reclaimed.

For well over 20 years, most particularly since the creation of the National Endowments For The Arts and Humanities, Congress in a bipartisan spirit, has consistently supported funding for the Endowments as well as the Smithsonian Institution, the National Gallery of Art and, in recent years, the Institute of Museum Services. This has been a clear declaration that financial assistance for the Arts and Humanities is a proper, if not critical, responsibility of the Federal Government. I refer my colleagues to the committee report in which a portion of the committee report on the original NEA legislation is quoted.

> This panel is motivated by the conviction that the arts are not for a privileged few but for the many; that their place is not on the periphery of society, but at its center; that they are not just a form of recreation, but are of central importance to our well-being and happiness.

Reflecting this notion that the arts should be shared, the committee has provided 50 percent of the funds necessary to bring to the American public, through public television, the July 4 celebration on the Capitol lawn.

These concerts by the National Symphony and major American artists have been shared live with Americans from Red Oak, Iowa to Fairbanks, AK. Report language this year goes one step further by encouraging the participation of other distinguished symphony orchestras.

My friends, this is an excellent bill, responsive to our stewardship commitments to the land and the people who live on it. Gifford Pinchot, the father of conservation and the former Governor of Pennsylvania, summarized the importance of preservation by saying:

> The very existence of our nation and all the rest depends solely on conserving our resources which are the very foundation of its life.

I ask my colleagues to adopt this bill.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AuCoin].

Mr. AuCOIN. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I certainly do rise in support of H.R. 3011, the fiscal 1986 Interior Appropriations Act, and I hope that Members who have been listening to the comments from both sides of the aisle understand the importance of the legislation and the sound job of crafting it that the members of the committee have done.

We often hear, at the beginning of debates on bills such as this, congratulations from the floor to the chairman and to the ranking members of the subcommittees who bring those bills to the floor for our consideration. But in this case, I think that all Members should pay a particular tribute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Yates] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Regula] for the outstanding work they have done and the cooperation they have shown, working together on a bipartisan basis to bring this bill before this body today. The support they have received from their own ranks on both sides of the aisle in turn is shown in the quality of the work product that we do bring before the House today.

This bill is the product of the review of budgets of nearly three dozen Federal agencies. The members of the committee have listened to the requests of hundreds of individual Members of this body. We have weighed the testimony of a staggering number of public witnesses, and out of all of that we bring to you a carefully balanced piece of legislation.

As a result of the work that I have described, members of the committee have produced a bill that is under, repeat, under last year's spending, a bill that is under what is called for in the House-passed budget resolution, while addressing many of the vital natural resource needs facing the country today.

I want to say to my colleagues, especially those Members who are not from States and districts in which the Forest Service or the Bureau of Land Management own large portions of their districts or States, that this bill is not just a Western bill or a Sun Belt bill. This bill is an all-American bill.

I do not hesitate to point out to the Members that this legislation is also for those of us in States like Oregon, our economic bread and butter. Our lifeline. It is the lifeblood of the forest products industry, which in turn produces products and fiber for the rest of the country to use and to enjoy. The bill is important for us in our part of the country for the protection of wilderness, the enhancement of fish and wildlife, and the promotion of recreation and tourism which we depend on in a commercial way, and share with the rest of the country for their enjoyment.

This bill contains a substantial increase in Forest Service and BLM timber sales programs which benefits, in a direct way, the State of Oregon, but also benefits the entire country because of the affordable lumber products that our region can produce for the rest of the country. Those timber programs, incidentally, consistently return a profit, I repeat, a profit, to the Federal Treasury and to the taxpayers from the harvesting that takes place under those programs.

The forest products industry is a basic industry of America, and for the Western region. If it is ever again to become competitive in our own markets, not to mention foreign markets, we must provide the kind of boost and assistance and funding levels that are found within the Timber Sales Program that this bill before you provides.

The bill before you is a bill that will go a long way toward improving anadromous fish stocks: The salmon and steelhead trout species that are vital to commercial and sports fishing alike. It is a bill that will help protect wilderness areas in my State and in many others for the enjoyment of the entire Nation. It is a bill that will enhance the recreation potential of one of the truly great scenic wonders of the country, the Columbia River Gorge in my State of Oregon, shared with the State of Washington for all to enjoy.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. AUCOIN] has expired.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman.

Mr. AUCOIN. I thank the gentleman.

It is not just the people of Oregon and Washington who will enjoy the protection provided in this bill for the Columbia River Gorge. This is a scenic treasure for the entire country to enjoy, and in that sense, the protections that we provide in this bill is a benefit for every taxpayer and every citizen of the country.

The bill also provides funds for local park projects all over the country, including my own.

Mr. Chairman, this is a prudent bill; it is a bill that reflects the fiscal constraints we are under, and yet it is one that tends to the vital natural resource issues and challenges that face America today. For all of those reasons and more, I urge the House to give a resounding vote of approval to the work of the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Ohio, and the members of their committee.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3011, the Interior appropriations bill for fiscal year 1985.

At the outset, I want to commend the chairman of the subcommittee, my good friend SID YATES and the new ranking member, RALPH REGULA for their hard work and skill in dealing with many difficult issues contained in this bill. With responsibility for a wide variety of environmental management, cultural and energy programs, SID YATES, RALPH REGULA, and other members of the subcommittee have put in countless hours during extensive hearings and markup to fashion a bill that is based on fact and on the pressing needs served by these programs.

I respect the work of this subcommittee, under the leadership of SID YATES, and I generally agree with the recommendations contained in the Interior bill.

However, there are always exceptions, and in this case, I am concerned about two issues related to this bill.

First, there is a recurring question about the need for a Synthetic Fuels Corporation. The vote on the rule last week was a clear indication that the House is ready and willing to deal with this issue.

Last year, after the Congress rescinded over $5 billion from the Corporation, we heard promises of change and a fresh approach with a newly reconstituted board of directors. Unfortunately, a year later, the names have changed, but the program is the same. The "new realities" are nothing new, and the comprehensive strategy report is less than impressive. Instead of proceeding along a fiscally prudent course, the Corporation has restated its goal to obligate the entire amount available, now approximately $7.9 billion.

Fortunately, this monster is somewhat under control. Thanks to the foresightedness of Secretary Herrington, the Department of Energy, just yesterday, pulled the plug on this project and refused to support the SFC's price guarantee award.

I am also concerned about a provision in this bill that had its origins in the synfuels debate of last year. The clean coal technology reserve is generally a good idea, but the outyear funding provided in H.R. 3011 is fiscally irresponsible in light of huge budget deficits. Also, the multiyear funding provided in this bill is contrary to the agreement reached last year on the synfuels rescission. The conference report on the CR clearly stated that any funding for the clean coal reserve would be "subject to annual appropriations" by the Congress.

To address this problem, I will offer an amendment at the appropriate time to delete the outyear funding provided in the bill for fiscal years 1987 and 1988. My amendment is designed to restore a measure of fiscal responsibility to the bill and at the same time provide a significant Clean Coal Demonstration Program.

Although the administration would prefer a total elimination of the program, the statement of policy on this bill indicates that the "administration supports a Conte-Broyhill amendment to eliminate funding for this activity in fiscal year 1987 and fiscal year 1988."

Mr. Chairman, the administration also objects to several other provisions of H.R. 3011, as reported. According to the Office of Management and Budget, this bill is more than $720 million above the 1985 enacted amount and $2 billion over the President's request. Although the committee numbers are measurably lower, we can safely say that the funding level in this bill is significantly higher than last year's level and the President's budget.

Without action to curb this spending, particularly the Clean Coal Program, the administration's intentions are clear. This bill is veto bait. The OMB statement of policy leaves no room for guessing: "The bill is unacceptable to the administration, [and] * * * it would not be possible to recommend to the President that he sign the bill in its present form." For the reference of my colleagues, I will include a copy of the "Statement of Administration Policy" on H.R. 3011 for the RECORD.

STATEMENT OF ADMINISTRATION POLICY

JULY 19, 1985.

Interior Appropriation Bill, 1986.

(Sponsor: Whitten (D), Mississippi.)

The bill is unacceptable to the Administration. While the Committee scores the bill as being $144 million over the 1985 enacted amount, and $1,037 million over the President's request for annually funded discretionary programs, we score it as being more than $720 million above the 1985 enacted amount (excluding the SPR acquisition funds) and $2 billion over the President's request. In addition, the administration strongly opposes:

The proposed $750 million multi-year appropriation to initiate a new Clean Coal Technology Demonstration program. The Administration supports a Conte/Broyhill amendment to eliminate funding for this activity in FY 1987 and FY 1988.

Continued funding for programs proposed for termination as well as substantial increases to ongoing programs;

Language (section 108) that excludes specific areas of the OCS from the offshore leasing program; and Language requiring a minimum fill rate for the Strategic Petroleum Reserve.

It would not be possible to recommend to the President that he sign the bill in its present form.

Although I have a few reservations about this bill, I am fully supportive of a vast majority of the agencies and programs funded in H.R. 3011. Thanks to the leadership of Chairman YATES, the bill contains increased funding for the management of our natural resources. Agencies like the Fish and Wildlife Service, the Bureau of Land Management, the Forest Service, the Minerals Management Service, and the National Park Service are custodians of millions of acres of federally owned land containing a tremendous amount of energy and natural resources.

This bill also lifts the proposed moratorium on land acquisition. The land and water conservation fund is the Federal Government's main land purchase account. This fund finances park, refuge and forest land acquisition. To address the pressing need in this area, this bill provides a total of $194 million for LWCF acquisitions, including $50 million for grants to State Land Purchase Programs. The bill also provides a much needed supplement to the duck stamp funds available to the Migratory Bird Commission. Through the wetlands loan fund, this bill provides $10 million for the purchase of vital wetland habitat.

Besides these resource management initiatives, H.R. 3011 provides increased funding for important Energy Conservation Programs. The Low-Income Weatherization Program was increased by $47 million for a total of $200 million in fiscal year 1986, and the Schools-Hospitals Program was increased by $9.5 million for a total of $47 million next year.

Finally, through the concern of the chairman, increases above the President's budget was provided to many of the cultural programs funded in this bill. The National Foundation on the Arts and Humanities, the Institute of Museum Services, the National Gallery of Art, and the Smithsonian Institution are allocated resources sufficient to continue important cultural, historic and scientific programs.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support this bill and hope they will join me in ironing out a few rough edges.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma for a question.

Mr. WATKINS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I stand in support of this bill, and also want to thank the minority leader for his tremendous work, along with the chairman, in crafting this legislation.

I would like to enter into a colloquy with the chairman.

Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that the committee has included funding for continued operation of the Tishomingo National Fish Hatchery at the level recommended by the administration.

Mr. YATES. That is correct.

Mr. WATKINS. I thank the chairman and the committee for providing funds for the continued operation of this important warm water hatchery in my district, which produces fish for Federal and State waters stretching from Idaho to Texas. Mr. Chairman, this hatchery is an important facility and an asset to the fishery resources of the Nation. However, the facility is not being used to its full potential. I understand the budget constraints faced by the committee, and I did not ask the committee to increase the funding for this hatchery in fiscal year 1986. However, it is my understanding that another Federal agency would use the ponds and other facilities at this hatchery, which are not currently being used by the Fish and Wildlife Service, for research into catfish breeding, feeding for maximum weight gain and solutions for parasite problems with the fish. This Agency would act as a "tenant" at the facility, and the research it performs would be helpful not only to the private sector aquaculturist, but also to the Fish and Wildlife Service itself in increasing the efficiency of its catfish production. Is it the intent of the committee that the activity I have described be allowed and encouraged?

Mr. YATES. To answer the gentleman's question, let me say there is nothing in this appropriation bill would prohibit the "joint tenant" relationship between the Fish and Wildlife Service and another Federal agency, such as you have described. In fact, the committee would encourage such a relationship, particularly where it would lead to full utilization of our hatchery resources and would benefit the Fish and Wildlife Service's hatchery efficiency.

Mr. WATKINS. I thank the chairman for yielding and for his support of this country's great fishery resources.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, let me say to my friend on the other side that I have no further requests for time.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I do have several requests. I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I simply want to congratulate the chairman and the ranking majority member of the committee for doing an outstanding job on the bill.

I only rise to express my concern about language that appeared on page 34 of the report, and also in the additional views appearing on page 150, later reflecting a potential agreement to set aside or create a moratorium on offshore leasing of off California lands for the purposes of drilling for some 15 years.

It is bad enough that we were approving every year in this bill for the last 4 years annual moratoria on offshore leasing. In fact, we excluded 53 million acres from offshore leasing in fiscal year 1984, and another 45 million acres in fiscal year 1985.

I have riser. to express my concern about that and have testified against such a policy, because I firmly believe it is not in the interest of this Nation to set aside lands that are potentially available for development when, in fact, we are currently importing some 34 percent of all of our oil needs. That costs the U.S. taxpayer and it cost the U.S. economy approximately a billion dollars a week. It adds significantly to our already terrible trade deficit.

I think it is just aggravating the situation when obviously we are going to need additional oil resources, but we are setting aside lands and saying to all Americans that we are not going to be able to touch those offshore lands, even if we reach another oil crisis such as we saw in 1973 and again in the late 1970's.

The fact is that Great Britain started their OCS program in 1964, 10 years after our first Federal program, but since then they have offered all of their lands for development of the OCS and they have actually leased 41 percent of their OCS lands for drilling.

Canada, by the same token, has offered all of its offshore for lease and has actually leased 32 percent of its offshore acreage.

In comparison, the United States has offered only 23 percent of its potential offshore acreage, and has actually leased only 3 percent of its Outer Continental Shelf for development.

We still produce only 9 percent of our domestic needs from the OCS while estimates tell us that our OCS contains over one-half of our future domestic oil reserves.

Yet we could well be contemplating a new OCS leasing policy that will aggravate this situation and lead us back to the days of energy dependence on foreign sources.

Before placing OCS leasing moratoria in annual appropriations bills and attempting to implement more onerous and much longer moratoria to the year 2000 we should carefully consider what we are about.

Section 18 of the 1978 OCS act mandates that there must be "an equitable sharing of development benefits and environmental risks among the various regions" in any OCS Program that we implement.

However, it will be impossible to strike any semblance of a balance in our OCS Program if millions of acres are deleted through any moratorium, particularly a 15-year one.

Louisiana, Texas and other Gulf Coast States already recognize this imbalance. In fact, Louisiana has cited this imbalance in recent and heretofore unpublicized objections to one section of the OCS Leasing Program.

Over 95 percent of the oil and 92 percent of the gas from the OCS have come from the Gulf States, primarily Louisiana and Texas.

This lack of responsibility of other regions of the country to our Nation's energy needs and security cannot and should not be continued.

□ 1700

Such a policy flies in the face of reason, and I only rise to urge the conference committee to exercise caution when they discuss this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that the members of the conference committee will in fact carefully consider this as we go on into the future.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BENNETT). The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON] has expired.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LIVINGSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words about the agreement recently reached between Interior Secretary Hodel and the California congressional delegation which effectively prohibits the offshore exploration of some 6,310 tracts along the California coastline.

While I have some grave reservations as to the propriety of this agreement especially in the context of the policies and procedures delineated by Congress through enactment of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act of 1978, the long-term impact of this agreement on this Nation's energy supply troubles me greatly.

There is little question in my mind that "locking up" such vast amounts of acreage is not in the best interest of this country. Our long-term energy policy needs to allow for the balanced development of our domestic natural resources so as to provide us with a degree of independence from foreign energy sources. At a time when we currently import about one-third of our oil supply, establishing a 15-year moratorium on such vast amounts of offshore acreage does not make good sense or policy.

I would urge my colleagues to carefully review the potential impact of this agreement on our future energy needs and outlook. Moreover, I truly hope that a more equitable arrangement can be achieved that addresses the needs of all Americans, not just a select few, and honors the obligations as well as the responsibility which this body has to exercise responsible control over Federal resources.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'BRIEN].

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I speak in followup of my friend, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON].

I must address first the chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], and the ranking member, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA]. As you addressed the fiscal responsibility golf ball, you had 433 coaches, all who had different ways to tell you how to swing at it, each with his and her own personal concerns. I think you have done a phenomenal job caring for the likes of me and others in this House, like me, and still observed restraint.

Having said that, I would like to add a word in support of the comments by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LIVINGSTON]. It seems to me that in the past, with the 1-year moratorium with respect to OCS leasing, we left the door open for adjustment. We are facing a 15-year moratorium now, and I am not satisfied that that is wise. In my hometown of Joliet we have many industries, many companies. All of them are major energy consumers. High natural gas prices brought on by expensive imported gas have been plaguing the region for several years. Instead of a 1-year moratorium, we are now faced with the possibility of a 15-year moratorium.

I think the 15-year moratorium would be shortsighted for the Nation's energy future. I urge my colleagues, and particularly Secretary Hodel, to reassess the adverse impact this restriction would have on all parts of the United States. It is not purely a California issue, and it is my hope that this might be addressed and modified in conference.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN].

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] first of all for their dedicated efforts on behalf of the Indian programs which are so vitally needed. I believe that our Indians are the most neglected and least cared for and least concerned about group of Americans, and without the dedicated efforts of both Mr. YATES and Mr. REGULA we would not see the vitally needed programs that are so important to maintaining our Indian population at a minimum—and I mean absolute minimum—level in our society. And I am speaking for many Arizonans who are very grateful for that.

I rise to comment just briefly on the Compact of Free Association with Micronesia. This a compact which is the result of 14 years of negotiations with the people of Micronesia. It is in the best interests of the people of Micronesia, and very importantly in the best interests of the people of the United States of America.

I would like to focus my remarks on the strategic aspect of Micronesia, and it might be of interest to my colleagues to know where Micronesia is. It sits in the middle of the ocean. It encompasses 2,100 islands, and it encompasses a size larger than the continental United States of America. Some of the islands' names may invoke the memory of individuals here who are old enough to remember World War II—names like Truk, Peleliu, Palau, and others which were so bitterly fought over by our American marines and soldiers during World War II. The reasons why those islands were fought over in those days is the same as today. It is one of the most strategically important parts of the world as far as the United States' national security interests are concerned.

Admiral Crowe, the former commander in chief of U.S. forces in the Pacific, wrote recently to Chairman UDALL:

> The missions of the Pacific Command are to deter aggression, to insure access to critical resources, and should deterrence fail, to defend the interests of our allies and friends. To do this I must have the capability to project military power as far forward as possible and at the same time prevent a potential enemy from seizing areas from which attacks on the United States, its territories, and allies and friendly nations could be launched.

Micronesia sits adjacent to the Philippines where we have two major bases today, Clark Air Force Base and Subic Bay. We all hope that those bases will be preserved, but we all know of the very untenable and difficult situation which we are now involved in because of the instability of the Marcos government in the Philippines. In the event of the loss of our bases in the Philippines, the United States' next place to base our forces is the Hawaiian Islands unless we can make use of the Micronesian Islands, and this compact ensures us the ability to do that.

Let me speak a little about the Soviet Union, if I may. On Monday, the Los Angeles Times printed an article concerning the Soviet buildup in the Far East, and I quote:

> In the view of many U.S. military commanders and civilian specialists in the region, the Soviet forces, while ostensibly defensive, are aggressively poised to intimidate China and Japan and are increasingly capable of challenging the U.S. Navy throughout the Pacific. Over the last decade, the Joint Chiefs of Staff concluded earlier this year, Soviet activity has created an unfavorable balance of forces in the region, and that continues to deteriorate.

The Soviets have been very active. They recently signed fishing rights agreements with the Kiribati Islands which are very lucrative for them and very generous by Soviet standards. Those of you who have never seen a Soviet fishing trawler should observe one someday. It does just about everything except for fishing. They are contemplating negotiating an offer for fishing rights from the nation of Vanuata, and the Soviet fleet is now their largest, consisting of roughly one-third of all Soviet submarines, one-fourth of all principal surface combatants, including two of their aircraft carriers, and one-third of their naval aircraft.

Mr. Chairman, these islands will protect our security in the Far East in perpetuity, and I strongly urge that this be looked upon favorably by our colleagues. I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] for their hard work in obtaining this compact for this bill.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] for his comments.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GROTBERG].

Mr. GROTBERG. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], the chairman of the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, and the ranking Republican member, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], for their diligence and hard work in crafting H.R. 3011, the Interior appropriations bill for fiscal year 1986.

I want to especially note that the committee has recommended adequate appropriations so that the Illinois and Michigan Canal National Heritage Corridor Commission, established as a result of Public Law 98-398 and constituted on May 8 of this year, just a couple of months ago, will have the resources it needs to begin its work of increasing recreational and economic opportunities along the entire corridor area.

I think a side comment is in order. In conferring with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], Members learn that Illinois has no national parks. In that great State, the land of Lincoln, we have a small Shawnee National Forest down in southern Illinois, but even with the unselfish decade or more of the service of the subcommittee chairman, nobody can lay it on him that he has made Illinois the national park wonder of the world. This is the closest we got to it. This is not a national park; it is a national corridor.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GROTBERG] has expired.

Mr. GROTBERG. Mr. Chairman, if I might have 1 more minute, I could finish my remarks.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 additional seconds to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GROTBERG].

Mr. GROTBERG. Mr. Chairman, I represent La Salle County, IL, where the terminus of the canal is located.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GROTBERG. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's contribution about my efforts. The reason I have not tried to make it a national park is the fact that it is naturally a place of attraction.

Mr. GROTBERG. I support that theory entirely.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, maybe the gentleman from Illinois would like to yield several minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GROTBERG] to discuss this park for Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I think I will leave that for another occasion.

Mr. GROTBERG. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, nobody is really too concerned about this except those of us in Illinois. I represent La Salle County where we have double-digit unemployment. There is great hope in the future for this corridor, and I for one extend to the gentleman all the appreciation of the community that I represent.

□ 1710

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS].

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage the ranking minority member in a short colloquy, if I could.

The Park Police Aviation Union in Anacostia was formed in 1973. To date it has logged over 12,600 accident-free flight hours, has transported over 1,945 patients on flights from accident scenes in the Washinton metropolitan area.

In addition, this unit has rescued countless people from certain death after thay have fallen in or have wandered into the dangerous waters of the Potomac River at Great Falls.

The unit provides security for the President, Vice President, visiting dignitaries, and the like.

The Park Police Aviation section is in serious need of more up-to-date aircraft. It is particularly important that this be done to ensure the safety of the pilots, medical technicians, and patients, while carrying out rescue and medivac operations.

To this end, I will seek to have $3,518,714 included in the fiscal year 1986 Interior supplemental appropriations bill in the spring for the procurement of two Bell 222 UT helicopters, the cost of which would be offset by disposing of the unit's present aircraft.

Would the gentleman respond to that?

I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Would the gentleman from Virginia expand a little bit and summarize the cost that would be associated with this procurement.

Mr. PARRIS. I would be delighted to provide that information and, of course, will do so for the record.

Each aircraft with the necessary equipment and necessary medivac rescue modifications would cost $1,759,357 less, of course, the surplus value of their current aircraft.

Mr. REGULA. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. I think he makes a point that we overlook and that is that the Park Service has a very substantial responsibility in the metropolitan area of Virginia, the District of Columbia, and Maryland, because of the highway supervision. They are a police force that most people do not realize are carrying this burden of covering such a large area.

I agree with the gentleman that the need for the new aircraft is clear. It is a medivac type of thing. I would be happy and I am confident the chairman would be to consider such a proposal when we get the fiscal year 1986 supplemental appropriations bill.

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman very much for his interest in this matter and express my hope that the proposal will receive the support of the committee at the time of the supplemental.

I would just add that the critical factor here is they have single-engine airplanes now with limited lift capability. If you get a net hanging under one of these helicopters and there are 8 or 10 people in the river and they all get on the net at the same time, you are going to lose the people, the pilots, and the helicopter, without the twin-engine capability. I think that is an important safety consideration which deserves the committee's attention.

I thank the gentleman.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3011.

Mr. Chairman, I include correspondence between myself and my colleagues, the gentleman from California, Mr. DOUG BOSCO, concerning the $2 million appropriation in the Interior appropriations bill for the Round Valley Indian Reservation to purchase the Big Bend Ranch in Mendocino County, CA, and the correspondence which pertains to certain in-holdings and agreements which have been reached between the gentleman from California [Mr. Bosco] and myself.

The letters are as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, July 18, 1985.

Hon. DOUG BOSCO,
Cannon House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR DOUG: It has been brought to my attention that a section of the fiscal year 1986 Interior Appropriations bill (HR 3011) contains language appropriating $2 million to the Round Valley Indian Reservation for purchase of the Big Bend Ranch in Mendocino County, California.

I am concerned that transfer of this property from private ownership to the reservation could possibly result in loss of access from my constitutents, Fred and Gay Borton, to a 480-acre ranch which they own. The Bortons' inholding is surrounded by the Big Bend Ranch, and their only access to it is across the Big Bend Ranch.

In addition, I am concerned that if the Big Bend Ranch passes to Indian ownership, pressure might arise in the future to acquire the Borton inholding as well.

I hereby request that HR 3011 be altered so as to preclude the possibility of either loss of right-of-way for the Bortons or forced sale of their inholding should the transfer of Big Bend Ranch to Indian ownership be completed.

Thank you very much for your assistance in this matter.

Best regards,

WILLIAM M. THOMAS,
Member of Congress.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, July 22, 1985.

Hon. WILLIAM M. THOMAS,
CHOB, Washington, DC.

DEAR BILL: Thank you for your letter regarding provisions of the fiscal year 1986 Appropriations bill (HR 3011) which call for the acquisition of the Big Bend Ranch in Mendocino County, California.

I want to take this opportunity to assure you that transfer of the Big Bend Ranch from private ownership to the Round Valley Indian Reservation will in no way affect private inholders. I am aware that two of your constituents, Fred and Gay Borton, own a 480-acre ranch within the geographic boundaries of Big Bend, and that they must travel through the ranch to gain access to their property.

I have been advised that acquisition by the Covelo Indian Community will not affect the Borton's access to their property, nor will it encourage acquisition of their inholding by the Covelo Indians. In short Mr. and Mrs. Bortons' private rights will not be affected by the proposed acquisition of Big Bend Ranch.

I hope this response addresses Mr. and Mrs. Bortons' concerns, and I thank you for calling this matter to my attention.

Cordially,

DOUGLAS H. BOSCO,
Member of Congress.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remaining time.

Mr. Chairman, there was a comment earlier about this bill being veto bait because it is over the administration's request. I just point out that all the appropriation bills that we have passed thus far, with the exception of the District of Columbia, have been over the administration's request.

I would point out, as the gentleman from Arizona emphasized, the tremendous breadth of responsibility covered by this bill, trust territories, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Bureau of Land Management, the Forest Service, the national parklands.

Again I would emphasize that this bill is a net revenue producer. It costs $8.1 billion and returns to the Treasury $12.5 billion.

Mr. BADHAM. Mr. Chairman, as the House considers the Interior appropriations bill for fiscal year 1986, I rise to express my objection to a certain provision that deals with the Outer Continental Shelf oil leasing agreement for the State of California.

As noted in the report, the moratorium on offshore leasing along the California coast has been deleted. This decision was made contingent upon a plan that was arranged by a few members of the California delegation and the Secretary of the Interior. This preliminary agreement calls for 150 of 6,464 tracts contained within the present moratoria to be offered for Outer Continental oil leasing. As part of this plan, six tracts off the coast of the 40th District that I represent will be made available for oil leasing.

At this time, I cannot be party to any such compromise that would allow drilling off this valuable coastal area. I oppose all OCS oil leasing in this area that is highly sensitive in terms of its recreational, environmental, and aesthetic value. The cities of Newport Beach and Laguna Beach would be seriously affected because of their dependence upon tourism for their economic viability. Any sort of oil spill or environmental damage that could occur would be devastating for the local hotels, restaurants, retail shops, and other businesses. Moreover, the cities depend upon the pristine ocean view to attract visitors; oil drilling platforms placed in areas as close as 4 miles off the coast of Newport Beach would destroy the aesthetic beauty of the coastline that thousands of tourists travel to enjoy every year. The city of Huntington Beach, which already has oil production off its coast, is concerned as well about the environmental effects of new wells, of particular concern is potential damage to air quality.

In light of the extreme sensitivity of this area, I adamantly oppose any such Outer Continental Shelf oil leasing proposal off the coast of my district. More importantly, the people of my district, including most of the elected city officials, have expressed their opinions quite clearly to me. They cannot, and will not, accept any plan that would allow any new drilling off their coast of Orange County and will work to defeat such a proposal by every means possible.

In the near future, I am confident that technology will become available for subsurface oil recovery operations. At such a time and with the proper safeguards for the environment, I would be in support of the recovery of this resource in order to contribute to the energy independence of the United States.

While technology will alleviate the environmental and aesthetic concerns, I want my colleagues to know that I believe the tentative California OCS agreement, under consideration now, is contrary to the interests and well-being of the people I represent, and the State of California, and I strongly oppose it.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3011, the Interior appropriations bill for fiscal year 1986.

I really want to express my appreciation to the chairman of the Subcommittee on Interior, SIDNEY YATES for the responsible levels of funding being recommended for the Bureau of Mines, the Office of Surface Mining's State AML Grant Program and for the Clean Coal Technology Program to be administered by the Department of Energy. In this regard, I would especially like to thank subcommittee members JACK MURTHA, JOE MCDADE and RALPH REGULA.

I am especially pleased that the committee has seen fit to appropriate $36.1 million for the Health and Safety Technology Program within the Bureau of Mines and $13 million for mining technology. The specifics contained in the committee report as to how this funding should be used, in my view as the chairman of the authorizing subcommittee, are highly commendable.

The State Reclamation Grant Program under the abandoned mine reclamation fund administered by OSM is a matter of great concern to my State of West Virginia. It is my understanding that due to a concern of the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, language has been inserted into the legislation to guide the distribution of the $186.2 million State AML grant appropriation. This language would prohibit any State from receiving fiscal year 1986 AML construction grant funds if that State's unobligated construction grant balance from fiscal years 1982 through 1985 exceeds the amount of its fiscal year 1985 construction grant and is directed at those States which have not used their AML funds in a timely manner.

I am pleased to note that West Virginia has perhaps the best track record in obligating its AML construction grants and, as such, would not be affected by this provision. The amount of West Virginia's unobligated construction grants from fiscal years 1982 through 1984 is below the amount the State received in fiscal year 1985. As such, the State will be in the position, when OSM considers its fiscal year 1986 grant, to receive the full amount requested for eligible projects.

Another important element of the effort to reclaim abandoned coal mine lands is the Rural Abandoned Mine Program. While I continue to advocate a minimum of $15 million per year for RAMP, the committee's inclusion of $9.4 million is far better than the administration's request to essentially kill the program.

Like a phoenix rising from the ashes of failure, the measure before us today contains a $750 million transfer of funds from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to the Department of Energy for the clean coal technology reserve. This program was authorized as part of the continuing appropriation for fiscal year 1985 and the decision by the committee to now provide the actual funds is commendable. Of the total appropriation, $100 million would be made available for fiscal year 1986 with $300 million in fiscal year 1987 and $350 million in fiscal year 1988 to fund various clean coal technologies with the Federal share not to exceed 50 percent of a given project's cost.

Under this provision, DOE must issue a request for proposals within 90 days of enactment and then move into the contracting process.

A great deal of emphasis is being placed on the utility applications of the technologies which may receive clean coal funding. In my view, DOE should focus on funding those technologies which would replace smokestack scrubbers, the dominant pollution control method in use today. Scrubbers are a technological dinosaur. They are inefficient and create pollution themselves in the form of sludge. With proper funding, commercial applications of fluidized bed combustion technology will prove to be more economical and environmentally sound than scrubbers. Fluidized bed combustion, I believe, is the cutting edge in clean coal technology for utility applications and should be the next generation of utility boilers.

At the same time, there are industrial applications of clean coal technology in great need of assistance, primarily those which would lead to a cleaner and more efficient method of producing coke for the steelmaking process. The Nation is currently faced with a shortfall in domestic coke production due to the inability of our coke ovens to comply with environmental standards. New technology in this area would not only assist the resurrection of our domestic steel industry, but improve conditions in the metallurgical coal fields of this Nation, such as those in southern West Virginia.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 3011 as reported by the committee.

● Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, there is a provision in this bill which appears to merely encourage States to carry out their responsibilities under the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 [SMCRA]. In fact, it sanctions a game of reclamation Russian roulette currently being played by officials of the Office of Surface Mining [OSM]. Today only a few people are affected, but if OSM begins to aggressively carry out its responsibilities for overseeing surface mining regulatory programs throughout the States and assumes partial responsibility for their programs, people in many coal producing States could be adversely affected. The provision is unwise, primarily because of the current sad state of affairs at OSM, but also because of the practical impact of this policy change on much-needed reclamation projects.

Title I of the bill appropriates money for the Abandoned Mine Reclamation Fund [AML], administered by the Office of Surface Mining. The money is used to reclaim mine sites abandoned prior to passage of SMCRA. Under current law, the question of whether a State is entitled to receive cleanup money for pre-1977 sites is straightforward: Does the State have an approved program for the regulation of current mine sites under section 503 of the Surface Mining Act? If so, the State is eligible for the money. If not, the State is ineligible. (Section 405(c) of SMCRA.)

In practice, OSM has ignored these statutory provisions. Currently, it is withholding reclamation money from the State of Oklahoma which has an approved State program, but requires Federal supervision of its enforcement. Title I of this appropriations bill adds a new twist to existing law. It prohibits the use of AML reclamation funds by States failing to take enforcement action with respect to post-1977 sites, unless the State has entered into an explicit agreement with OSM to remedy its failures to enforce the law.

The legal effect of this new provision is that, for the future, Congress sanctions OSM's previously illegal practice of withholding money in cases like Oklahoma and protects OSM from future lawsuits. The practical effect is to give Federal bureaucrats authority to delay grants to selected States by withholding or delaying approval of enforcement plans. This can only mean further delays in restoring dangerous sites, with continuing risks to individuals.

I do not believe this is wise policy for the simple reason that over the past 6 years, in my congressional district alone, five people died in accidents at unreclaimed mine sites. Until it happens, obviously no one can know whether deaths or injuries will occur at the mine sites for which grant applications are pending or will be submitted to OSM. But as long as the money is available, I don't think it makes a lot of sense to take the risk to find out. The money has already been collected through a coal production tax, and needs only to be appropriated by Congress and distributed by OSM to the States. It should be spent for the purposes for which it was collected.

OSM is plagued by serious problems. There is ample opportunity for the unwise exercise of the new authority to withhold reclamation funds. Bureaucratic infighting and turf battles seriously undercut the agency's ability to accomplish its basic mission, and OSM's relationships with the States are not immune to these problems. I am concerned that dangerous sites in affected States will go unreclaimed while State and Federal officials argue over enforcement plans. If this provision is enacted, Federal and State officials alike will have a heavy burden in carrying it out.

Furthermore, even if OSM were trouble free, I believe it is a mistake to tie reclamation funds so closely to the regulatory programs. It may have made sense at the outset for Congress to use the funds as an incentive to States to establish regulatory programs. Now, almost all coal producing States have approved State programs. Citizens who live near and are adversely affected by deteriorating abandoned mine sites should not be penalized for the problems State officials have in administering the regulatory programs.●

● Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3011, the Interior and related agencies appropriations for fiscal year 1986. This proposal includes funding for capital improvement projects in the U.S. insular areas which is important for their continued economic development and central to their collective goals of achieving economic self-sufficiency.

For the U.S. Virgin Islands, this bill provides a loan for extension of the airport runway on St. Croix, This island has suffered the closing of one of its two major plants, Martin Marietta Alumina, and the loss of over 300 employees at its other major plant, Hess Oil Virgin Islands. The island must bolster its ability to compete in the tourist market, and the industry has made it clear that this means servicing transportation that feeds directly into the European and west coast U.S.A. tourist.

I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the subcommittee for his support in this matter. I also wish to thank the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOLAND] as well as the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. REGULA], and the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MCDADE] for their support and help in bringing about this vital help for the island of St. Croix In the U.S. Virgin Islands.

Generally, this legislation represents a conscious effort to stay within the budgetary objectives of this body. That it does this while funding crucial projects such as those included for the insular areas is exemplary. I urge my colleagues to support its passage.

● Mr. BRUCE. Mr. Chairman, today I rise to thank Chairman YATES and the Interior and related agencies appropriations committee for bringing us H.R. 3011, and to offer strong support for the clean coal technology reserve and the fossil energy research programs contained in the bill.

Our Nation knows what it's like to be held hostage to oil importers' high prices. That's why we've been trying so hard to strengthen our hand at energy independence. If this Congress chooses, our Nation's abundant coal resources may help solve this crucial problem.

Through the clean coal technology reserve, we have an opportunity to move toward energy independence, to reduce the environmental problems associated with burning high sulfur coal, to increase economic activity by raising levels of employment and to increase the use of Midwestern and Eastern coal as an energy source.

The Department of Energy [DOE] has identified emerging clean coal technology projects that could be accelerated to commercialization through cooperative efforts of a private-public partnership. As a prerequisite, these projects would require 50 percent cost-sharing between industry and the Federal Government, making it a true cooperative effort with a substantial private sector commitments. Important to industry participation, is the commitment of Federal funds for multiyear disbursement.

Mr. Chairman, an amendment offered today, potentially jeopardizes the future of the reserve by proposing to eliminate the important outyear funding included in the bill. I hope my colleagues understand that the reserve funding is consistent with the House budget resolution. The money we are talking about is not new appropriations, but rather a transfer of funds already appropriated from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. To ensure that this important program goes forward, I urge my colleagues to defeat the amendment.

Coal is our Nation's most abundant energy resource. And, while it provides roughly one quarter of our Nation's energy consumption, coal, is still greatly under utilized.

Technologies which enable us to use more of our vast coal reserves are a step in the right direction toward energy independence and a significant environmental benefit both to new and existing generating plants.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I want to urge my colleagues to support the clean coal technology reserve. The funding for this critical initiative is a move which will bring these coal concepts toward commercialization, and this country toward energy independence, while using our Nation's coal in a clean and environmentally safe manner.

Thank you, Mr. Chairman.●

● Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to agree with my colleagues that it is important, in fact vital, that we be mindful of the need to consider the ever-growing Federal deficit and that we make every effort to control that deficit.

However, when we discuss the need to continue to support the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, I part company with many of my colleagues. I am afraid that my colleagues are forgetting the long gasoline lines and the escalating prices of fuel oil of just a few years ago. Are our memories that short? Can we afford to forget? The Synthetic Fuels Corportation was created as a result of those hard times to help us develop energy alternatives so that we would never be faced with another energy crisis again and so that we could progress down the road toward energy independence.

Beyond the disturbing memories of the long gas lines and the rising cost of oil, we must continue to be aware of the political instability in the Middle East. Yes, we have our friends there, but can they and/or will they be able to satisfy our energy needs in a time of crisis, a crisis that we cannot begin to anticipate?

I ask my colleagues how they will respond to their constituents if there was a widespread war in the Middle East in the near future? Where will we obtain our fuel oil from? How will we heat our homes? While our Nation has responded to the call for conservation, and we are, the reports tell us, experiencing an oil glut, I caution my colleagues that we are far from energy independence. The fact remains that we depend on oil from the Middle East.

The Synthetic Fuel Corporation has provided us with a number of options that are worth considering. It is important that we continue to develop those options that would otherwise not be explored in a meaningful commercial capacity.

Let us not be shortsighted on this matter of national security. With the creation of the Synthetic Fuel Corporation we were given the opportunity to learn from our mistakes, to have the foresight to anticipate our potential energy requirements should we again be faced with circumstances similar to, or perhaps worse, than those we faced in the seventies. We need to develop energy alternatives. We need to develop them today so that when we need them we will have them. I urge my colleagues to share my hopes for the future when America can effectively and efficiently utilize our natural resources as a major component of a national energy policy.●

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to H.R. 3011, Interior appropriations.

Last year, we appropriated $8.118 billion for this bill. Of that, $8.104 is discretionary spending. This year, the committee reported a bill containing $8.261 billion, of that $8.248 is discretionary spending. That represents a 1.7 percent increase over last year's level, in violation of the spirit of our budget resolution which called for a discretionary spending freeze.

Appropriations bills coming to the House have been slightly above or at a freeze level. This bill is no exception.

The problem, in my judgment, is that these bills represent an abdication of our responsibility to reduce Federal spending.

The House has been willing to vote for several freezes on authorizing bills. Unfortunately, when the appropriations bills are considered, the bills that actually spend funds, our good intentions whither. If we really want to do something about deficits, then we need to vote to reduce appropriations. It is sad, but true, that we cannot reduce spending without cutting somebody's program. Deficit reductions are not painless.

The House did a good job in cutting the synfuels item. It even stretched itself on the clean coal matter. Overall, however, it is still unwilling to reduce spending.●

● Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend you for reporting out a very balanced appropriations bill for the Department of the Interior, particularly with respect to the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

The Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee, which I chair, closely examines the administration's proposed budget for the Service every year and makes recommendations for increases and decreases in that proposal to the House Budget Committee and to the Subcommittee on Interior Appropriations.

This year, my committee's leadership made a recommendation to both committees concerning the Refuge Revenue Sharing Program. Under this program, the Fish and Wildlife Service makes payments to counties in which Service lands are located based on fair market value of those lands. Funding for these payments is derived from revenues acquired through the sale of products of Service lands. If net revenues are not adequate to make full payment according to the formula contained in the act, direct appropriations are authorized to make up the difference. For fiscal year 1986, net receipts are estimated at $4,302,000 and the appropriation has been set by your committee at $5,645,000 for a total of $9,947,000 or 58 percent of the Federal obligation. An additional $7,135,000 is needed for full funding of this program.

Mr. Chairman, I appreciate your concern over this matter as stated in House Report 99-205 on page 20 where it is pointed out that there is a discrepancy between refuge revenue sharing and a similar program run by the Bureau of Land Management called payment in lieu of taxes. BLM's program is funded at 95 to 100 percent of its cost, whereas the Service's program is funded at only 58 percent. I agree that the Department of the Interior should correct this imbalance in its request for fiscal year 1987 and I have so informed Under Secretary

Anne McLaughlin by letter of June 10, 1985.

Mr. Chairman, let me assure you of my committee's continuing interest in this and other programs of the Fish and Wildlife Service. I look forward to working with you to achieve equity for refuge revenue sharing in fiscal year 1987.●

The House has a great record of rhetorical commitment to deficit reductions. It has not yet backed up that rhetoric with action. I will vote against this appropriations bill in the hope for some real spending cuts.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I have no further requests for time, and I ask that the Clerk read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, namely:

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT

MANAGEMENT OF LANDS AND RESOURCES

For expenses necessary for protection, use, improvement, development, disposal, cadastral surveying, classification, and performance of other functions, including maintenance of facilities, as authorized by law, in the management of lands and their resources under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management, including the general administration of the Bureau of Land Management, $378,556,000: Provided, That notwithstanding any other Act, none of the funds made available to the Department of the Interior or the United States Forest Service during fiscal year 1986 by this or any other Act may be used to implement the proposed jurisdictional interchange program until enactment of legislation which authorizes the jurisdictional interchange.

CONSTRUCTION AND ACCESS

For acquisition of lands and interests therein, and construction of buildings, recreation facilities, roads, trails, and appurtenant facilities, $1,203,000, to remain available until expended.

PAYMENTS IN LIEU OF TAXES

For expenses necessary to implement the Act of October 20, 1976 (31 U.S.C. 6901–07), $102,900,000, of which not to exceed $400,000 shall be available for administrative expenses.

LAND ACQUISITION

For expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 205, 206, and 318(d) of Public Law 94–579 including administrative expenses and acquisition of lands or waters, or interest therein, $2,800,000, to be derived from the Land and Water Conservation Fund, to remain available until expended.

OREGON AND CALIFORNIA GRANT LANDS

For expenses necessary for management, protection, and development of resources and for construction, operation, and maintenance of access roads, reforestation, and other improvements on the revested Oregon and California Railroad grant lands, on other Federal lands in the Oregon and California land-grant counties of Oregon, and on adjacent rights-of-way; and acquisition of lands or interests therein including existing connecting roads on or adjacent to such grant lands; $66,140,000 to remain available until expended: Provided, That the amount provided herein for the purposes of this appropriation on lands administered by the Forest Service shall be transferred to the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture: Provided further, That the amount appropriated herein for road construction shall be transferred to the Federal Highway Administration, Department of Transportation: Provided further, That 25 per centum of the aggregate of all receipts during the current fiscal year from the revested Oregon and California Railroad grant lands is hereby made a charge against the Oregon and California land grant fund and shall be transferred to the General Fund in the Treasury in accordance with the provisions of the second paragraph of subsection (b) of title II of the Act of August 28, 1937 (50 Stat. 876).

RANGE IMPROVEMENTS

For rehabilitation, protection, and acquisition of lands and interests therein, and improvement of Federal rangelands pursuant to section 401 of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1701), notwithstanding any other Act, sums equal to fifty per centum of all moneys received during the prior fiscal year under sections 3 and 15 of the Taylor Grazing Act (43 U.S.C. 315, et seq.), and the amount designated for range improvements from grazing fees and mineral leasing receipts from Bankhead-Jones lands transferred to the Department of the Interior pursuant to law, to remain available until expended: Provided, That not to exceed $600,000 shall be available for administrative expenses: Provided further, That the dollar equivalent of value, in excess of the grazing fee established under law and paid to the United States Government, received by any permittee or lessee as compensation for an assignment of a grazing permit or lease, or any grazing privileges or rights thereunder, and in excess of the installation and maintenance cost of grazing improvements provided for by the permittee in the allotment management plan or amendments or otherwise approved by the Bureau of Land Management, shall be paid to the Bureau of Land Management and disposed of as provided for by section 401(b) of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1701): Provided further, That if the dollar value prescribed above is not paid to the Bureau of Land Management, the grazing permit or lease shall be canceled.

SERVICE CHARGES, DEPOSITS, AND FORFEITURES

For administrative expenses and other costs related to processing application documents and other authorizations for use and disposal of public lands and resources, for monitoring construction, operation, and termination of facilities in conjunction with use authorizations available until expended: Provided, That pursuant to this Act and hereafter, and except with respect to those applications for which costs are recovered on the basis of a schedule of fees or charges fixed by regulation, the amounts collected under section 304 of the Act of October 21, 1976, and sections 101 and 203 of Public Law 93–153 and appropriated under this heading shall be sufficient to meet the actual cost, including direct and indirect costs, to the United States, as determined by the Secretary, of the application processing and other activities, including the full cost of preparation of environmental impact statements, required in connection with the application for which such charges are made: Provided further, That pursuant to this Act and hereafter, and except with respect to those applications for which costs are recovered on the basis of a schedule of fees or charges fixed by regulation, no funds other than those appropriated under this heading, or otherwise available under the provisions of subsection 307(c) of the Act of October 21, 1976, may be used to meet the costs determined by the Secretary, in his discretion, to be reasonable under section 304(b) of said Act.

MISCELLANEOUS TRUST FUNDS

In addition to amounts authorized to be expended under existing law, there is hereby appropriated such amounts as may be contributed under section 307 of the Act of October 21, 1976 (43 U.S.C. 1701), and such amounts as may be advanced for administrative costs, surveys, appraisals, and costs of making conveyances of omitted lands under section 211(b) of that Act, to remain available until expended.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 106. Appropriations made in this title shall be available for obligation in connection with contracts issued by the General Services Administration for services or rentals for periods not in excess of twelve months beginning at any time during the fiscal year.

SEC. 107. The Secretary may authorize the expenditure or transfer of any no year appropriation in this title, in addition to the amounts included in the budget programs of the several agencies, for: the suppression or emergency preventive of forest range fires on or threatening lands under jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior; for the emergency rehabilitation of burned-over lands under its jurisdiction; for emergency actions related to potential or actual earthquakes or volcanoes; for emergency reclamation projects under section 410 of Public Law 95-87; and shall transfer, from any no year funds available to the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement, such funds as may be necessary to permit assumption of regulatory authority in the event a primacy State is not carrying out the regulatory provisions of the Surface Mining Act: Provided, That appropriations made in this title for fire suppression purposes shall be available for the payment of obligations incurred during the preceding fiscal year, and for reimbursement to other Federal agencies for destruction of vehicles, aircraft, or other equipment in connection with their use for fire suppression purposes, such reimbursement to be credited to appropriations currently available at the time of receipt thereof: Provided further, That funds transferred pursuant to this section must be replenished by a supplemental appropriation which must be requested as promptly as possible.

SEC. 108. No funds provided in this title may be expended by the Department of the Interior for the preparation for, or conduct of, pre-leasing and leasing activities (including but not limited to: calls for information, tract selection, notices of sale, receipt of bids and award of leases) of lands within:

(a) An area of the Outer Continental Shelf, as defined in section 2(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331(a)), located in the Atlantic Ocean, bounded by the following line: from the intersection of the seaward limit of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts territorial sea and the 71 degree west longitude line south along that longitude line to its intersection with the line which passes between blocks 598 and 642 on Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NK 19-10; then along that line in an easterly direction to its intersection with the line between blocks 600 and 601 of protraction diagram NK 19-11; then in a northerly direction along that line to the intersection with the 60 meter isobath between blocks 204 and 205 of protraction diagram NK 19-11; then along the 60 meter isobath, starting in a roughly southeasterly direction; then turning northeast and north until such isobath intersects the maritime boundary between Canada and the United States of America, then north northeasterly along this boundary until this line intersects the 60 meter isobath at the northern edge of block 851 of protraction diagram NK 19-6; then along a line that lies between blocks 851 and 807 of protraction diagram NK 19-6 in a westerly direction to the first point of intersection with the seaward limit of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts territorial sea; then southwesterly along the seaward limit of the territorial sea to the point of beginning at the intersection of the seaward limit of the territorial sea and the 71 degree west longitude line.

(b) The following blocks are excluded from the described area: In protraction diagram NK 19-10, blocks numbered 474 through 478, 516 through 524, 560 through 568, and 604 through 612; in protraction diagram NK 19-6, blocks numbered 969 through 971; in protraction diagram NK 19-5, blocks numbered 1005 through 1008; and in protraction diagram NK 19-8, blocks numbered 37 through 40, 80 through 84, 124 through 127, and 168 through 169.

(c) The following blocks are included in the described area: In protraction diagram NK 19-11, blocks numbered 633 through 644, 677 through 686, 721 through 724, 765 through 767, 809 through 810, and 853; in protraction diagram NK 19-9, blocks numbered 106, 150, 194, 238, 239, and 283; and in protraction diagram NK 19-6, blocks numbered 854, 899, 929, 943, 944, and 987.

(d) Blocks in and at the head of submarine canyons: An area of the Outer Continental Shelf, as defined in section 2(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (45 U.S.C. 1331(a)), located in the Atlantic Ocean off the coastline of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, lying at the head of, or within the submarine canyons known as Atlantis Canyon, Veatch Canyon, Hydrographer Canyon, Welker Canyon, Oceanographer Canyon, Gilbert Canyon, Lydonia Canyon, Alvin Canyon, Powell Canyon, and Munson Canyon, and consisting of the following blocks, respectively:

(1) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NJ 19-1; blocks 36, 37, 38, 42-44, 80-82, 86-88, 124, 125, 130-132, 168, 169, 174-176, 212, 213.

(2) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NJ 19-2; blocks 8, 9, 17-19, 51-52, 53, 54, 61-63, 95-98, 139, 140.

(3) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NK 19-10; blocks 916, 917, 921, 922, 960, 961, 965, 966, 1003-1005, 1009, 1011.

(e) Nothing in this section shall prohibit the lease of that portion of any blocks described in subsection (d) above which lies outside the geographical boundaries of the submarine canyons and submarine canyon heads described in subsection (d) above: Provided, That for purposes of this subsection, the geographical boundaries of the submarine canyons and submarine canyon heads shall be those recognized by the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration, Department of Commerce, on the date of enactment of this Act.

(f) Nothing in this section shall prohibit the Secretary of the Interior from granting contracts for scientific study, the results of which could be used in making future leasing decisions in the planning area and in preparing environmental impact statements as required by the National Environmental Policy Act.

(g) References made to blocks, protraction diagrams, and isobaths are to such blocks, protraction diagrams, and isobaths as they appear on the map entitled Outer Continental Shelf of the North Atlantic from 39° to 45° North Latitude (Map No. MMS-10), prepared by the United States Department of the Interior, Minerals Management Service, Atlantic OCS Region.

SEC. 109. None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available pursuant to this Act shall be obligated or expended to finance changing the name of the mountain located 63 degrees, 04 minutes, 15 seconds west, presently named and referred to as Mount McKinley.

SEC. 110. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, appropriations in this title shall be available to provide insurance on official motor vehicles, aircraft, and boats operated by the Department of the Interior in Canada and Mexico.

SEC. 111. No funds provided in this title may be used to detail any employee to an organization unless such detail is in accordance with Office of Personnel Management regulations.

SEC. 112. Upon written request of the Governor of the State of Pennsylvania describing the land to be conveyed, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into an agreement for the conveyance to the State of Pennsylvania, or to any political subdivision or governmental agency of the State, of all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to a parcel of land, not to exceed 110 acres, within the Delaware Water Gap National Recreation Area in Pennsylvania. Upon conveyance such land shall not be part of such recreation area. Such conveyance shall be without monetary consideration and shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary considers appropriate, including provisions for reversion of such land if the Secretary determines that it is not being used in furtherance of the Pocono Mountains Center for the Arts. No funds of the United States may be used for the construction or operation of any such center, including routine maintenance, security services, utilities, site construction planning, or construction of parking areas.

Mr. YATES (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that titles I and III be read by titles and that title I be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against title I?

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota will state his point of order.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against section 112 on page 38 beginning on line 18 and proceeding through line 10 on page 39. Section 112 is a violation of rule XXI, clause 2. This language is legislation in an appropriation bill.

Mr. Chairman, the specific provision in question would authorize the deletion of 110 acres of national parkland from the Delware Water Gap National Recreation Area for development by the State of Pennsylvania of a Pocono Mountain Center for the Arts. As chairman of the Subcommittee on National Parks and Recreation, I am concerned about this inappropriate attempt to use the appropriations process to alter park boundaries. This action I think subverts the long standing policy of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs to give careful consideration to any deletion of park property.

Section 112 authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to take an affirmative action to convey lands to Pennsylvania—a power he presently does not possess.

The precedents of the House clearly establish that an appropriations bill may not impose additional duties on Federal officials which are not authorized by law.

In addition, the intent of this provision is to change the use of lands which have been included by law in the National Park System, actually a national recreational area.

By definition, the Congress has exempted national parklands from the normal provisions of law regarding the disposal of Federal property. This provision has the effect of amending that statutory injunction by providing for the transfer of parklands not otherwise authorized by law.

It was only recently that I was made aware of the existence of the Pocono Arts Center proposal. To date, little information has been made available as to just what this proposal would entail. In conferring with National Park Service officials, I find that no feasibility study has been done on the proposed site for the Arts Center.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman has gone beyond the point of order in getting into the substance here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must confine his remarks to the point of order and not to the merits of the section.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, just in conclusion, as a matter of policy and procedural standpoint, section 112 does not belong in the Interior appropriations bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does any other Member desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to concede the point of order, but I would like to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania requesting to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. McDADE. Well, Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order. The gentleman was speaking beyond the scope of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's remarks have been finished on that matter.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. As long as the gentleman concedes the point of order, that is sufficient.

Does any other Member wish to be heard?

If not, the Chair rules that the point of order is conceded, sustained, and the section in controversy is stricken.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I did not know that my colleague was going to do this, although I did write him a letter indicating that I would not press this item, which is an item in my congressional district, so I do not object to his point of order at all. In fact, it is appropriate; but I do have an understanding, I believe, with the gentleman from Minnesota that there will be very timely hearings in his committee on this project and the gentleman very kindly indicated that to me.

I yield to the gentleman if he wishes to respond.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

I think it comes as no surprise to the gentleman and I certainly did not intend to surprise the gentleman with regard to raising this point of order; but we have been seeking information and we certainly will give this matter further consideration. I appreciate the gentleman's cooperation.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Let me say to my colleagues so that the record is clear. This is 110 acres of land. It does represent, I suppose, some departure from policy, one can always argue that. It is something that I have worked on for 4 years. It is a transfer of a few acres in a national recreation area to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, which has pledged to construct at no cost to the Federal Government an arts center. This is an area that is a national recreation area that was created back in the administration of President Kennedy. It is an area that I have an intense interest in. It is a project that I have worked on for over 4 years.

I agree to the prerogatives of my colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota, and we will be down with people who will address the subject with him. I want to see it done in a timely way.

□ 1720

It is, I think, an important project that can bring, in a cost-effective way, enormous benefits to a lot of people in this country.

I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any further points of order?

Are there any further amendments to title I?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SHAW

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHAW: Page 14, line 22, strike out "$4,529,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,438,000".

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I am offering would reduce the amount appropriated in the bill to the National Park Service for the operations and maintenance at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performance Arts by $90,580 or 2 percent.

This appropriation has not been authorized and exceeds the amount which has already been approved by the House Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Earlier this year, the Public Works Committee recommended to the Budget Committee a 2-percent reduction in this programmatic area and consistent with that recommendation the Subcommitte on Public Buildings and Grounds, accepting its responsibility, reduced the administration-requested funding for the Kennedy Center to $4,438,420.

Since the rule on this bill prohibits a point or order against this provision, I am offering this amendment which would implement committee's position regarding the funding for the center in fiscal year 1986.

I would ask each of you, at a time when we are being asked to scrutinize all programs across the board, and to reduce and not merely give rhetoric to reducing the deficit, what program cannot afford a 2-percent reduction?

In many other programs, including those affecting those on Social Security and Veterans Pensions we are asking for far greater sacrifices than this.

If we reject this amendment, I think it is clear to us and to the public that all we are saying like we have said so many times before, is that we would like to reduce spending, but not our own.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment does not propose draconian cuts in the funding at the Center but it would require that the Center, like all other agencies and programs, bear their fair share of the responsibility in our efforts to reduce the deficit.

I would urge the Members to adopt the amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAW. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, let me say that the Apropriations Committee is in a quandary on this, because it respects the gentleman's reduction, and yet the chairman of the full committee says that he opposes the gentleman's reduction, that the gentleman's reduction was approved in subcommittee rather than full committee, and that the chairman proposed to contest it in full committee.

Had the full committee accepted the gentleman's amendment, let me say, I was prepared to accept it. But what we have done in this case is to accept the budget recommendation sent to the committee by the President.

Under the circumstances, in view of the fact that the committee has not acted finally, I do not think our committee can accept the amendment.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAW. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the subcommittee has made a good point; I would again emphasize that this reflects the administration's request, and they have the responsibility of operating the Kennedy Center. It is the same level as fiscal year 1985. It is, in effect, a freeze at the 1985 level.

I would emphasize again also that the level of visitation at the Kennedy Center, in addition to performances, is quite large. It is one of the most popular items for people to visit when they come to Washington, and therefore, the maintenance costs are a severe problem resulting from the traffic flow of people.

For that reason, I would have to oppose the amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield on one further point?

Mr. SHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I look at the committee print of the Appropriations Committee, and I learn that the amount made available to the Park Service for fiscal year 1984 was actually $20,000 higher than the amount made available in fiscal year 1985, and therefore, in fiscal year 1986. So, we are moving in the direction of lower costs.

The point I want to make is that this committee does not want to get into an intramural fight between the gentleman and the full committee, and would request, therefore, that the gentleman fight it out in his full committee and come to us rather than letting us do it.

Mr. SHAW. If I might reclaim my time, this is the problem that we have, because of the points of order and the rule that we are here on, and the fact that the gentleman has been successful in getting around the point of order on this particular point.

I have made this on my statement. The subcommittee has completed its work on this matter. It now sits before the full committee. This amount has not been authorized, and we are getting back into the same crunch that we were in before.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida.

That amendment proposes to reduce the fiscal year 1986 appropriation for the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts 2 percent below this year's level of funding.

It is my understanding that this amendment is being offered primarily on the basis of so-called recommendations made by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation to the Budget Committee during formulation of the fiscal year 1986 budget resolution.

Let me clarify this.

No formal recommendations were ever submitted to the Budget Committee by the Public Works Committee. Rather, suggestions covering a wide range of possible program reductions were presented with the full awareness that the congressional budget process may result in changes in these.

In fact, the House-passed fiscal year 1986 budget resolution assumes no cut in funding for the Kennedy Center below this year's level. Rather, it assumes the so-called freeze level—even rounding that figure to the next million. The freeze level is the exact amount which is included in this appropriation bill.

Further, in maintaining the same level of funding in fiscal year 1986, the National Park Service's Kennedy Center budget reflects absorption of the full-year costs of the 1985 pay increase equaling $71,000. The fiscal year 1986 budget also reflects the proposed 5-percent employee salary decrease which resulted in a $71,000 reduction in total personnel costs. In addition, two cyclic maintenance projects totaling approximately $35,000 were deferred to stay within the fiscal year 1985 budget level. We have been advised by the National Park Service that cuts below this year's level would further delay critical and necessary Kennedy Center maintenance programs—many of which are already long overdue.

In addition, Mr. Chairman, on May 23, 1985, the Senate passed S. 710 which authorizes the freeze level for fiscal year 1986 for the Kennedy Center. H.R. 2392, as introduced, would also authorize the "freeze" level for fiscal year 1986.

"Going below the freeze" at a time when the budget resolution, relevant authorization bills, this appropriation bill and program needs assume and dictate otherwise, does not speak to sound fiscal policy.

Mr. Chairman, I urge defeat of this amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to read some testimony that was presented to our committee on May 8, 1985. It is a statement by Manus J. Fish, Jr., the Regional Director of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior on hearings that we held concerning the administration's position on the 1986 budget request for the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

I read as follows: "The President's 1986 budget request of $4,529,000 for the Kennedy Center maintains the same level of funds as the fiscal year 1985 appropriation."

So this is exactly the amount that was requested by the administration in the budget proposal that was sent to our committee in our hearings, and I urge the defeat of the amendment and yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device and there were—ayes 200, noes 227, answered "present" 1, not voting 5, as follows:

NOT VOTING—5

Hayes	Ireland	McEwen
Hefner	Loeffler

□ 1740

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Ireland for, with Mr. Hayes against.

Messrs. DONNELLY, MARLENEE, and REID, Mrs. HOLT, and Mrs. COLLINS changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Mr. MONSON and Mr. SWEENEY changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

□ 1750

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other amendments to title I?

Pursuant to House Resolution 240, it shall be in order to consider an amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 23, 1985, by Representative SHARP, if offered by Representative SHARP or Representative CONTE, which shall not be subject to amendment but shall be debatable for one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed thereto.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE II—RELATED AGENCIES

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE FOREST SERVICE

FOREST RESEARCH

For necessary expenses of forest research as authorized by law, $124,989,000, of which $4,000,000 shall remain available until expended for competitive research grants, as authorized by section 5 of Public Law 95-307.

STATE AND PRIVATE FORESTRY

For necessary expenses of cooperating with, and providing technical and financial assistance to States, Territories, possessions, and others; and for forest pest management activities, $56,193,000, to remain available for obligation until expended, to carry out activities authorized in Public Law 95-313: Provided, That a grant of $3,000,000 shall be made to the State of Minnesota for the purposes authorized by section 6 of Public Law 95-495.

NATIONAL FOREST SYSTEM

For necessary expenses of the Forest Service, not otherwise provided for, for management, protection, improvement, and utilization of the National Forest System, and for liquidation of obligations incurred in the preceding fiscal year for forest fire protection and emergency rehabilitation, including administrative expenses associated with the management of funds provided under the heads "Forest Research", "State and Private Forestry", "National Forest System", "Construction", and "Land Acquisition", $1,035,433,000, of which $158,408,000, for reforestation, timber stand improvement, and maintenance of forest development roads and trails shall remain available for obligation until September 30, 1987.

CONSTRUCTION

For necessary expenses of the Forest Service, not otherwise provided for, for construction, $183,785,000, to remain available until expended, of which $25,649,000 is for construction and acquisition of buildings and other facilities; and $158,136,000 is for construction of forest roads and trails by the Forest Service as authorized by 16 U.S.C. 532-538 and 23 U.S.C. 101 and 205: Provided, That funds becoming available in fiscal year 1986 under the Act of March 4, 1913 (16 U.S.C. 501), shall be transferred to the General Fund of the Treasury of the United States.

LAND ACQUISITION

For expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965, as amended (16 U.S.C. 460l-4-11), including administrative expenses, and for acquisition of land or waters, or interest therein, in accordance with statutory authority applicable to the Forest Service, $29,500,000, to be derived from the Land and Water Conservation Fund, to remain available until expended.

YOUTH CONSERVATION CORPS

There is appropriated $10,000,000, of which $3,400,000 is hereby transferred to "National Forest System", $3,300,000 is hereby transferred to "Operation of the National Park System", National Park Service, and $3,300,000 is hereby transferred to "Resource Management", United States Fish and Wildlife Service, for high priority projects which shall be carried out as if authorized by the Act of August 13, 1970, as amended by Public Law 93-408.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS FOR NATIONAL FORESTS, SPECIAL ACTS

For acquisition of land within the exterior boundaries of the Cache, Uinta, and Wasatch National Forests, Utah; the Toiyabe National Forest, Nevada; and the Angeles, San Bernardino, and Cleveland National Forests, California, as authorized by law, $780,000, to be derived from forest receipts.

ACQUISITION OF LANDS TO COMPLETE LAND EXCHANGES

For acquisition of lands in accordance with the Act of December 4, 1967, as amended (16 U.S.C. 484a), all funds deposited by State, county or municipal governments, public school districts or other public school authorities pursuant to that Act, to remain available until expended.

RANGE BETTERMENT FUND

For necessary expenses of range rehabilitation, protection, and improvement in accordance with section 401(b)(1), of the Act of October 21, 1976, Public Law 94-579, as amended, 50 per centum of all moneys received during the prior fiscal year, as fees for grazing domestic livestock on lands in National Forests in the sixteen Western States, to remain available until expended.

MISCELLANEOUS TRUST FUNDS

For expenses authorized by 16 U.S.C. 1643(b), $90,000, to remain available until expended, to be derived from the fund established pursuant to 16 U.S.C. 1643(b).

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS, FOREST SERVICE

Appropriations to the Forest Service for the current fiscal year shall be available for: (a) purchase of not to exceed 252 passenger motor vehicles of which 13 will be used primarily for law enforcement purposes and of which 233 shall be for replacement only; acquisition of 161 passenger motor vehicles from excess sources, and hire of such vehicles; operation and maintenance of aircraft, the purchase of not to exceed 2 for replacement only, and acquisition of 43 aircraft from excess sources; notwithstanding other provisions of law, existing aircraft being replaced may be sold, with proceeds derived or trade-in value used to offset the purchase price for the replacement aircraft; (b) services pursuant to the second sentence of section 706(a) of the Organic Act of 1944 (7 U.S.C. 2225), and not to exceed $100,000 for employment under 5 U.S.C. 3109; (c) uniform allowances for each uniformed employee of the Forest Service, not in excess of $400 annually; (d) purchase, erection, and alteration of buildings and other public improvements (7 U.S.C. 2250); (e) acquisition of land, waters, and interests therein, pursuant to the Act of August 3, 1956 (7 U.S.C. 428a); (f) for expenses pursuant to the Volunteers in the National Forest Act of 1972 (16 U.S.C. 558a, 558d, 558a note); and (g) for debt collection contracts in accordance with 31 U.S.C. 3718(c).

None of the funds made available under this Act shall be obligated or expended to change the boundaries of any region, to abolish any region, to move or close any regional office for research, State and private forestry, or National Forest System administration of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, without the consent of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry in the United States Senate and the Committee on Agriculture in the United States House of Representatives.

Any appropriations or funds available to the Forest Service may be advanced to the National Forest System appropriation for the emergency rehabilitation of burned-over lands under its jurisdiction.

Appropriations and funds available to the Forest Service shall be available to comply with the requirements of section 313(a) of the Federal Water Pollution Control Act, as amended (33 U.S.C. 1323(a)).

The appropriation structure for the Forest Service may not be altered without advance approval of the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations.

Funds appropriated to the Forest Service shall be available for assistance to or through the Agency for International Development and the Office of International Cooperation and Development in connection with forest and rangeland research and technical information and assistance in foreign countries.

Funds previously appropriated for timber salvage sales may be recovered from receipts deposited for use by the applicable national forest and credited to the Forest Service Permanent Appropriations to be expended for timber salvage sales from any national forest.

Provisions of section 702(b) of the Department of Agriculture Organic Act of 1944 (7 U.S.C. 2257) shall apply to appropriations available to the Forest Service only to the extent that the proposed transfer is approved by the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations in compliance with the reprogramming procedures contained in House Report 97-942.

No funds appropriated to the Forest Service shall be transferred to the Working Capital Fund of the Department of Agriculture without the approval of the Chief of the Forest Service.

Not to exceed $900,000 shall be available from National Forest System appropriations or permanent appropriations for the specific purpose of removing slash and cull logs from the Bull Run, Oregon, watershed to preserve water quality and reduce fire hazards.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CONTE

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment made in order under the rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONTE: Page 45, after line 18, insert the following new item:

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

ENERGY SECURITY RESERVE

(RESCISSION)

Except as otherwise provided in this item, all funds appropriated to the Energy Security Reserve are hereby rescinded. Funds so rescinded shall include all funds appropriated to the Energy Security Reserve by the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1980 (Public Law 96-126) and subsequently made available to carry out title I, part B, of the Energy Security Act by Public Laws 96-304 and 96-514, and shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury. This rescission shall not apply to:

(1) funds transferred from the Energy Security Reserve by this Act;

(2) $500,000,000, which may not be used for payments with respect to projects or modules under the Energy Security Act; and

(3) such amounts as may be necessary to make payments for projects or modules for which obligations were entered into under title I of the Energy Security Act before the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and a Member in opposition will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Is this the so-called Synfuels amendment?

Mr. CONTE. This is the Conte-Sharp Synfuels amendment.

Mr. YATES. If the gentleman will yield further, in view of the action taken by the House last week in connection with the Synfuels Corporation, we are prepared to accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REGULA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we, too, on the minority side have discussed this and recognize the vote last week. In view of that, we are prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP], the coauthor of this amendment.

Mr. SHARP. I appreciate the gentleman's yielding. Mr. Chairman, I urge the House to support the Sharp-Conte amendment to the Interior Appropriations bill which will save the taxpayers over $6 billion.

The rescission is the first step in closing down the unproductive Synthetic Fuels Corporation and transferring responsibility for a scaled down synfuels program to the Department of Energy.

In the last few years, the Federal deficit has skyrocketed while oil prices have fallen. The justification for immediate, massive investment in commercial scale synfuels production has disappeared.

The budget deficit requires that we eliminate any unnecessary spending, and the $6 billion that could be obligated by the Synfuels Corporation without congressional action is clearly unnecessary. The Nation's energy security needs will also be better served by the elimination of the Synfuels Corporation and the establishment of a more rationally scaled and paced effort in the appropriate Government agency.

The amendment, which is printed on the other side of the page, is simple. It rescinds all of the $7.9 billion available to the Synfuels Corporation except:

Whatever amount of money is transferred to the clean coal technology reserve by the bill; $500 million to be transferred to the Department of Energy in subsequent legislation; and,

Money for awards made by SFC before enactment of the bill.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for all of his cooperation in this matter.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFALCE].

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Chairman. I rise in opposition to the amendment to the Interior Department appropriations bill offered by Mr. SHARP that would rescind all but $500 million from the amounts available to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and prohibit the Corporation from using the $500 million for purposes other than administrative expenses.

Authorization legislation (H.R. 935) which would abolish the Synthetic Fuels Corporation and transfer $500 million to a scaled-down program for financial assistance for commercial applications of synthetic fuels technology in the Department of Energy is now before the Subcommittee on Economic Stabilization, which I chair, and will be taken under consideration by the subcommittee after the August recess.

The changes which would be brought about by this legislation and by the proposed amendment to the Interior Department appropriations bill represent yet another dramatic cutback in this country's alternative energy program. I am fearful that we may be moving too precipitously to dismantle a potentially very necessary program because of the pressure of currrent budgetary considerations, the changed nature of our immediate energy needs, and justifiable discomfiture with the Corporation's previous record. These problems can and must be solved, but we are far more likely to arrive at a correct solution if we proceed through the orderly legislative process, rather than attempting to address these issues throug the appropriations process as the proposed amendment calls for.

The issue has become the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. There is very good reason for that. The Corporation has an unimpressive record. It has funded only two projects in its 5-year history and has developed a reputation for being inappropriately generous with its funds. Five of seven Board members resigned as a result of scandal last year. But we have attempted to address these issues. Just last year, the Congress agreed to substantial cutbacks in the Synfuels Program and reconstituted the Corporation with new directors who, I believe, are attempting to scale the program down to realistic levels, to redefine its goals, to eliminate past abuses, and to institute sound managerial policies.

Although the new Board contains many former critics of the Corporation who can be expected to vigorously implement these reforms if given a chance, these measures may very well not suffice, and a more fundamental restructuring may be necessary. But in the course of these efforts, we must not abandon our commitment to a synthetic fuels program. This amendment will effectively abolish the Corporation, but it will abolish the program as well—a program difficult to establish, complex to administer, but critical to this country's energy future. Without authorizing legislation to establish the structure and policy parameters of a new program, we will be left with no mechanism for planning for our energy future.

On June 30, 1985, the Corporation submitted its first comprehensive strategy report. This report contains many recommendations and findings which should be carefully studied before settling upon any one legislative response. Similarly, we have not yet fully examined alternative institutional models which could house this important effort. Although transferring the Corporation's scaled down functions to DOE may save money and reduce application, we have no assurances that this would be the most efficient approach for achieving the program's goals. This can only be determined by exploring all possibilities in the regular course of legislative business.

Long-term planning is not this institution's forte, but we must not ignore what the future could hold. It is vital that this country have a viable synthetic fuels program. World supplies can be easily disrupted, and world oil prices may well undergo rapid increases within a few years despite the apparent current glut. Several of the oil exporting nations are potentially subject to future political unrest and instability. Yet, the United States still imports more than one-third of its oil needs, and by the year 2000 this figure is expected to rise to 50 percent. Within the next decade, the United States will completely exhaust its supply of proven reserves with little prospect of replacing them by increased exploration.

Despite these facts, potentially we remain energy rich: Our domestic supplies of coal and oil shale are sufficient to fill our energy needs for centuries. But unless we develop the technology to convert these solid fuels into liquid transportation fuels, they will continue to lie in the ground, as our payments for foreign oil increase. We cannot rely solely on the private sector to do so, nor can we achieve these goals without some linkage between basic and applied research and commercialization remains uncertain.

Opponents of the current program have argued that its projects are not economical. Mere economics is not the point. Naturally, the price of synfuels will initially be higher than comparable oil products. If synthetic fuels production were commercially feasible, there would be no need for Government involvement. The United States, however, needs the protection that a domestic synfuels industry would provide in the event of future oil disruptions, and the present weakness in oil prices does not change that fact.

We should also not be overly swayed by claims that this measure will significantly reduce the current budget deficit. If the amendment passes, we will not immediately save $6 billion as some of the proponents suggest. Because the Corporation relies primarily on price and loan guarantees rather than direct cash outlays, the immediate dollar savings between now and 1990, as estimated by the Congressional Budget Office, will be approximately $332 million. The $6 billion savings will not be fully realized until 2005, and only then if the Corporation obligates all its current budget authority, a situation that in all probability will not occur. Not only are the potential budget savings overstated, but the proposed $500 million transfer to DOE, when coupled with the $750 million proposed for the Clean Coal Program, actually serves to increase cash outlays by $1.25 billion since these sums are currently lines of credit. What these figures demonstrate is that fiscal considerations, while important, should not be decisive in our deliberations regarding the fate of the Synfuels Program.

The program is a vital one. It may well have to be more radically restructured to ensure that it achieves its goals. I would urge, however, that we work cooperatively through the authorization process to ensure the continued operation of a synthetic fuels program deserving of our support.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, One year ago, in connection with the fiscal year 1985 Interior appropriations bill, I asked my colleagues to stop the Synfuels Corporation from wasting money on bad projects. I said then that before you agree to keep funding the SFC, you ought to know what the SFC is likely to do with its money. I reviewed a chart that showed the eight projects that had received letters of intent.

One year later, I can use almost the same chart. The SFC has spent about $20 million in administrative expenses, but the chart is shorter because two of the eight projects have dropped out and none have been added. Although there has been much discussion of restructuring these remaining six projects, the Corporation has taken no action to revoke or amend the outstanding letters of intent.

Looking at projects 1 and 2, you can see that the Union Shale Oil Technology would receive more than half of the total funds remaining available to the SFC, nearly $5 billion. The price support level ought to be enough to stop you. Even worse, the fact is, Union still cannot get its technology to work.

Moving down the list, the Great Plains project is in limbo. It produces gas from Western coal at a price two to three times higher than the price of natural gas. Not surprisingly, the corporate sponsors are seeking price supports and refinancing of the $2.02 billion Federal loan guarantee they have already received. The Federal Government's options on Great Plains are pay a lot now or pay even more later. Fortunately, the Secretary of Energy has chosen not to throw good money after bad. At least we should learn something from Great Plains: Once you begin these enormous, uneconomical projects, their appetite for subsidies is insatiable.

The Northern Peat Energy project would turn peat moss into briquettes that could be used to replace wood or coal at three times the cost. Does that make sense to you? Wood and coal are our most abundant resources. The purpose of the SFC was supposed to be the production of alternatives to oil for use as liquid transportation fuels.

The last two projects are very small heavy oil and shale oil research projects, similar to efforts being done by other companies with no Federal assistance at all.

I urge my colleagues to look closely at this chart. These boondoggles are what you get by continuing the Synfuels Corporation, not energy security. Vote "aye" on the Conte-Sharp amendment.

LETTERS OF INTENT EXECUTED OR AUTHORIZED BY SFC

1. Union Oil Shale(II).	$2.7 billion price guarantees.	$92 per barrel...	Technology has not yet worked.
2. Cathedral Bluffs Oil Shale.	$2.19 billion loan and price guarantees.	$60 plus inflation per barrel.	83 percent of production from Union technology.
3. Great Plains Coal Gasification.	$720 million price guarantee in addition to $2.02 billion DOE loan guarantees.	$6.75 per million BTUs initially.	Sponsors can walk away in 1986 without paying more interest or principal.
4. Northern Peat.....	$365 million loan and price guarantees.	$10.50 per million BTUs.	No environmental permit: product replaces coal/wood.
5. Seep Ridge Oil Shale.	$45 million loan and price guarantees.	$42.50 per barrel plus inflation (raw shale oil).	1,000 bpd: really R&D scale.
6. Forest Hill Heavy Oil.	$60 million loan and price guarantees.	$37.50 per barrel.	1,750 bpd of heavy oil.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENTS IN SUPPORT OF THE CONTE-SHARP AMENDMENT TO H.R. 3011—INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES FISCAL YEAR 1986 APPROPRIATIONS

Rescission of all but $500 million of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation's funds would save the Government over $6 billion.

The Synthetic Fuels Corporation has compiled a record of inaction, excessive salaries and pensions, and has not contributed to the development of synfuels.

If the Congress does not act swiftly, billions of dollars may be obligated by the Synfuels Corporation without any congressional review.

Commercialization of current synfuels technologies will not prepare us for future petroelum disruptions. We do consumers no favor to replace $28 a barrel crude oil with $65–$90 a barrel shale oil, and this assumes that some liquid fuels plants are built that actually work. It hasn't happened yet except for one built with private money in Tennessee.

Private industry is working to improve Synfuels technology so that synthetic fuels can be an economical alternative to imported oil. Building commercial plants now is a very expensive way to prove what we already know: Current technology is inadequate to produce synfuels at anything close to current or projected oil prices.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. TAUKE. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I rise in support of the amendment.

The issue today is whether the Nation can afford an agency that has accomplished virtually nothing in the years it has been in operation except to spend money for salaries, quarters, and glossy reports. Others today will detail the Synfuels Corporation's conceptual and operating shortcomings. I want to discuss what are not issues today. The defenders of the Synfuels Corporation have dragged in so many red herrings that we could open up a fish market.

1. THIS IS NOT A TRADE ISSUE

The Synfuels Corporation can only make worse the terrible trade problem this Nation faces.

In 1982, the Office of Technology Assessment estimated that it would cost $250 to $400 billion 1980 dollars to construct enough plants to produce 5 million barrels per day of synfuels, and that assumes no cost overuns. Even if we could afford that kind of money, spending it on synfuels would increase our import bill.

First, more deficit spending means more pressure on interest rates and a higher dollar. That, in turn, opens the doors for more imports and prices American products out of world markets.

Second, we do not save jobs by providing industry with energy that costs three times more than everyone else in the world is paying for it.

2. THE SYNFUELS CORPORATION IS NOT A JOBS PROGRAM

Like any public works program, some jobs will be created in the few areas where plants are built, but they will be largely temporary. The permanent jobs that are created will depend upon continued Federal subsidies. Those are not the kind of jobs we ought to be creating.

3. THE SYNFUELS CORPORATION IS NOT ESSENTIAL TO THE DEVELOPMENT OF SYNFUELS

Private industry is moving ahead to develop good synfuels technology.

Shell and Pepco are planning coal gasification projects. Sohio, Atlantic Resources, Combustion Engineering, and other are moving to perfect coal-water technology. These are only a few examples. The point is, the Synfuels Corporation is not necessary to bring along domestic synfuels technology.

4. THE SYNFUELS CORPORATION IS NOT A STRATEGIC ASSET

The Synfuels Corporation has made no meaningful contribution to energy security. Given the state of synfuels technology and energy markets, it cannot. For years, the supporters of the Synfuels Corporation have told us the Corporation is essential to energy security. For years, they have told us to be patient with the Corporation. They were wrong 5 years ago when the Corporation was created. They are wrong now.

Vote yes on this amendment.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Indiana and Massachusetts—not because I wish to defend the Synthetic Fuels Corporation's record of mismanagement, delay, and inefficiency—but because I want my colleagues to understand that the proffered alternative synthetic fuels program which we will ultimately be presented with will be woefully inadequate and shortsighted for this Nation's long-term energy security. Under the amendment offered today, we are being asked to rescind all but $500 million of the funds which remain to the SFC after what amounted to virtually the same debate last year—a debate which ultimately ended in a very careful compromise which at that time rescinded a substantial amount of the then available funds. Today we're being asked to finish that job with the promise that we will then have an opportunity to replace the SFC with a $500 million synthetic fuels R&D program within the Department of Energy [DOE]. An affirmative vote on this amendment would break the promises we have made to countless communities throughout this Nation—a promise that the Federal Government is serious about developing the vast energy resources of western Colorado, Pennsylvania, Utah, and other States and a promise that we are committed to energy independence.

Those who want to abolish the SFC argue that passage of the amendment is necessary for both fiscal reasons and to stabilize our longer term energy options. None in this Chamber can argue with the absolute necessity of reducing Federal outlays—both today and in the longer term. But we must consider the ultimate financial and energy security fallout from adoption of the Conte-Sharp amendment.

Mr. Chairman, every Member should be alerted before they cast today's vote that, despite the current glut in the world marketplace and the complacency that glut may engender, the storm clouds of yet another energy crisis are slowly gathering. Last year, imports of foreign energy supplies actually rose for the first time since 1979. Last year, at the same time, energy demand also rose for the first time since 1979. In the face of that upward trend in demand, our producers have not responded with additional supplies—instead they have actually reduced exploration efforts. If, as recent projections indicate, demand continues to rise once again, the signal is dangerously clear. We will become more dependent on foreign supplies, not less—and that is not a policy this body should embrace.

Looking to our longer term energy options, the picture becomes even more sobering. Estimates of our offshore reserves are continually being downgraded—recently by as much as 55 percent. Estimates of proven onshore reserves remain sketchy, but nevertheless point to a finite supply. The promise of initiatives in conservation and renewables remains bright, but are stymied by a currently flat market and a shortsightedly diminished Federal commitment.

All of these domestic trends point to one frightening message for the 1990's—that the serious energy problems of the 1970's will reappear, and with them the severe economic shocks that so disrupted this Nation.

DOE estimates point to a rise in imports as a share of total supply from 30 percent to nearly 50 percent by 1995. At the same time, the Department's midrange estimates indicate a price of some $74 per barrel of oil by that time. Meanwhile, as our domestic production declines, as other free world supplies in the North Sea and other regions are depleted, as we wait for the sorely needed promise of conservation and renewables to be realized, greater and greater amounts of world energy reserves will be concentrated in the most volatile region of the world—the Persian Gulf. That portends a reemergence of the OPEC cartel as virtually the sole price leader in the world, a circumstance with which we are all painfully familiar.

Let's remember that the 1979 oil shock cost the OECD countries nearly $1 trillion in lost growth opportunities. Despite our increasingly successful efforts to attain greater energy use efficiencies in industrial processes, transportation, and residential uses, there is little evidence to suggest that we will not be as vulnerable—if not more vulnerable—to a similar shock in the 1990's. Consequently, we have but one defense and that is to prepare now for the 1990's—through accelerating the filling of our strategic petroleum reserve, by reinvigorating our commitments to conservation and renewables, by working with our domestic producers, and by answering the very legitimate environmental and techical questions which surround the production of synthetic fuels.

What of the broken promise of economic commitments? Communities throughout the Nation have invested millions of dollars based on the Federal promise of a major commitment to synthetic fuels development. In Colorado alone, the State and Western Slope communities have invested hundreds of millions in infrastructural and community improvements in anticipation of the development of Colorado's vast oil shale reserves. Those very same communities are now reeling from the retrenchments we have already made in synfuels development. Concurrently, agriculture—the other major economic base for the region—is reeling from its worst economic crisis since the Depression. Enactment of the Conte-Sharp amendment would serve up another economic slap in the face to those communities.

Western Colorado deserves an opportunity to break out of a cycle of boom and bust. Those communities deserve a return on the investments they have made based on a Federal promise. Those communities deserve assurance that the very same development crash course we instituted in the late seventies and early eighties is not reimposed during the next energy crisis. What those communities deserve is a Federal Synfuels Program which uses the current lull to answer questions about shale, to collect and evaluate all relevant environmental impact data, and to test all of the technology options at a commercially scaled modular size sufficient to create certainty and confidence for future investors.

Last year, we voted to abolish the SFC's production goals and reduced the Corporation's budget by 45 percent. That leaves little justification for pursuing continued development of commercial-scaled plants. But last year's action should not be now construed as a justification for abandoning synfuels altogether—which is exactly what support of a $500 million alternative program would be.

We should now be committing ourselves to producing information about synfuels. But that information has to be useful in a real world context. Our experiences with the Union phase I shale technology make that abundantly clear. In that instance, a technology worked perfectly well in a laboratory setting only to encounter problem after problem in a commercial mode. We're not arguing here for commercially scaled plants. We're arguing for commercially scaled modules. That distinction is crucial. By committing ourselves to demonstrating commercially scaled modules, singularly and in conjunction with other technologies, we can respond to the challenges we face with synfuels—the challenges of certainty, stability, and reasoned development.

Mr. Chairman, I am hesitant today to stand before my colleagues and defend the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. Indeed, it may be that the only way to get a viable synfuels program moving again is to abolish the SFC and build a program which focuses on policy and progress rather than high salaries, mismanagement, and stalemate. But the only option we have today is to defeat the Conte-Sharp amendment—a vote which is for a viable synfuels program instead of the lip service provided by the proposed $500 million DOE alternative.

Unfortunately the debate today does not focus on the real issue of what type of synfuels program we should commit ourselves to developing. Instead, we are told to either vote for the current SFC or abolish it in favor of an inadequate replacement program. The debate should be focused on the appropriate level of that commitment—not on Members' position concerning the SFC. But given the constraints of today's limited option, I urge my colleagues to defeat the pending Conte-Sharp proposal.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Due to a favorable energy climate, and to a variety of problems in its management, I'm afraid the Synthetic Fuels Corporation has become an easy target for the born-again budget cutters in this body. It has become a scapegoat for our inability to rein in excessive Federal spending and reduce deficits.

Others have pointed out the exaggerated claims as to how much this amendment would actually save. Thus, let me devote my time to two facets of this issue I consider most important: First, to the false sense of energy security we have been lulled into, which if this amendment passes, could lead to increased energy vulnerability of the United States; and second, to the basic integrity of the United States, and the ability of our Government to keep its word.

During my first term in the House, I was privileged to be the only Republican congressman from the Rocky Mountain region chosen to serve on the joint House-Senate Energy Committee, which developed the legislation that set up the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. We had just come through an energy crisis where the OPEC cartel had nearly succeeded in bringing this country to its knees by dictating both the price and supply of oil on world markets. As a result, in the United States we saw long lines at the gas stations, factories shut down because there was not enough energy to run them, farmers without sufficient fuel to plant and harvest their crops, and truckers without the fuel necessary to deliver products to their destinations. Although I personally would have preferred tax incentives to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, the fact was that we needed to do something to prevent this situation from happening again—and the SFC was the concensus choice of this body. I certainly do not condone mismanagement and the abuses that have taken place with the SFC, but to now abandon this protective shield against future energy crisis—just because energy is plentiful today—would seem extremely shortsighted. Passage of this amendment would shatter any chance we might have had of developing a viable, and totally American fuel supply. It would amount to hiding our heads in the sand like so many ostriches. The good times we're enjoying today—plentiful, moderately priced fuel, sufficient energy to keep the fires of industry burning—will not last forever without vision. Our national security is as dependent on adequate oil supplies as it is on our Armed Forces to preserve peace. We must at least develop the capability to gear up into large scale synfuels production in the event of energy disruption.

We also need to consider another side to this issue—the importance of the U.S. Government to keep its word.

Based on the Federal Government's commitment to develop synthetic fuels, private companies and local governmental units have invested millions of dollars in projects such as Union and Cathedral Bluffs, the two oil shale projects in northwestern Colorado.

Most of you have probably never heard of the towns of Parachute, Meeker, and Rifle on the western slope of the Rockies. These are rugged, small towns with only a few hundred people each—the kind of town you might find anywhere in the United States. Yet these towns are special in that they sit on top of vast fields of oil shale—oil which is accessible, but only if we develop the proper technologies to tap this wealth.

Based on letters of intent, commitments from the Federal Government, in hand guarantees of future prices to meet production costs, private companies have invested an estimated $1 billion in the two projects near these towns. Local units of government have also invested substantial sums on infrastructure to support the projects. It's estimated that over $330 million has been spent on new housing, roads, schools, sewers, and water projects to meet the needs of the expected population growth.

And now we are about to create Federal ghost towns by reneging on promises made to those who believed that pledge, and in turn invested their time, money, and hopes into synfuels development. Out of fairness, I feel we should at the very least live up to those letters of intent. Abandoning those such as the citizens of western Colorado who have so faithfully taken their Government at its word will not only cause them great personal and community harm, but in the process harm the credibility and reliability of our Government as well.

I urge you to retain our commitment to the people of Colorado and to the future of a fuel efficient America, by voting against the amendment.

Mr. OXLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. OXLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Conte amendment.

The Synfuels Program is a legacy of the fuel-scarce days of the late 1970's. Launched by the Carter administration, it was flawed from the start by the fact that it takes more energy to produce synthetic fuels from oil shale and other sources than is produced—at prices which are not even close to market clearing prices for our consumers. I have continually expressed my deep concern that we were literally throwing away billions of dollars of taxpayers' money, with dubious economic merit with respect to most of the SFC-funded projects. And we are no more energy independent today because of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation than we were in the late 1970's.

As I mentioned on the floor last week, the Synthetic Fuels Corporation has spent more than $70 million on salaries and luxurious offices while backing just two projects. And that's only the tip of the iceberg when one considers the notorious SFC management practices and the nature of a number of proposed synfuels projects. Quite frankly, the SFC has historically been more concerned about protecting data on its projects and sponsors than protecting the taxpayer who must foot the bill for the SFC's activities.

We are faced with a problem very similar to a fat lady on a diet. She is clearly overweight, but if another piece of food is placed in front of her, chances are she'll devour it and be no better off than before. It seems to me that Congress is in the position of putting the fat lady on a diet—if not a total cutoff of food—in the case of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. If we fail to fully debate and vote on this issue, we can only blame ourselves for dropping the ball for not saving the taxpayers over $6 billion.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. COATS. Mr. Chairman, the House last week expressed its will that the Synthetic Fuels Corporation be abolished by voting by a large majority to defeat the earlier rule for the consideration of the Interior appropriations bill.

In that vote, we made clear our belief that the Corporation has not effectively or efficiently met its mandated task of supporting the development of alternative fuel resources. We now must followthrough on our earlier action by adopting the amendment and rescinding all funding from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I believe that this is the only sensible course of action to follow from not only a budgetary standpoint, but also as a managerial move.

The Corporation was created to provide assistance to the private sector in the development of synthetic fuels projects, with a congressionally mandated goal of achieving production capacity of 500,000 barrels per day of crude oil by 1987. Now, in 1985, little to no progress has been made toward that goal, and the Corporation came to the not-too-surprising conclusion in its recent comprehensive strategy report that they would be unable to reach that target. Instead of working toward energy independence, the Corporation has worked toward more wasteful Government spending. They will continue to do so to the tune of over $6 billion if we do not take action today.

I believe that this amendment continues to provide for progress in synfuels research by leaving funding for a scaled down and more efficient research program at the Department of Energy. I support this provision because we should continue our investigations in this area. The bloated program we have today, however, far exceeds any measure of what is reasonable to advance this cause.

Mr. Chairman, the Synthetic Fuels Corporation was created as a sort of alchemist to create energy from our natural resources. Instead, it has operated in reverse gear, turning our valuable Federal gold into nothing but higher budget deficits. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. COUGHLIN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Conte-Sharp amendment to rescind all but $500 million of the approximately $7.9 billion currently available to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

I have worked for several years with my distinguished colleagues HOWARD WOLPE and MIKE SYNAR in seeking to gain enactment of legislation to abolish this Corporation. Their efforts have greatly increased national awareness of the myriad problems involved with synthetic fuels development.

I want to take a few minutes this evening to outline my opposition to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

First, the Synthetic Fuels Corporation is an expense we can no longer afford. Designed to convert our vast reserves of coal and oil shale into liquid transportation fuels, we have learned that this mandate cannot be met. Synthetic fuels technologies are immature and much farther from commercial viability than had been anticipated. We have realized that synthetic fuels technologies are uneconomical and require massive Federal subsidies. In fact, the price of synfuels has risen from $60 to $90 per barrel of oil equivalent while the price of oil continues to decline below $30 per barrel.

Doesn't it seem ironic that we will allow billions of dollars, as much as $7.9 billion, ot be spent on the commercialization of uneconomic and immature technologies when, at the same time, we are desperately searching for ways to reduced the deficit.

If we are candid about dealing with the deficit, we should adopt the Conte-Sharp rescission amendment. Let's save our beleaguered taxpayers some money tonight and adopt the Conte-Sharp amendment.

Mr. SCHAEFER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. SCHAEFER. Mr. Chairman, it's with a great deal of regret that I must speak in opposition to an amendment that has been advocated by so many of my Energy and Commerce Committee colleagues that I have the greatest respect for. However, I must.

I must because I consider this amendment to be extremely shortsighted in meeting our future energy needs.

How soon we forget, Mr. Chairman. How soon we forget that it was only 12 years ago that we spent our Saturday afternoons sitting in lines waiting to purchase $5 worth of gasoline. How soon we forget that we had to go on daylight savings time earlier than expected in order to save energy. How soon we forget that many businesses went on flextime so that less fuel would be used. How soon we forget.

Now we all know that these aren't the midseventies, but the mideighties. The world changes and we cannot remain static in our views. At the same time, we are all familiar with the lessons to be learned from history.

Gasoline was selling for approximately 30 cents per gallon 12 years ago; 5 years later that price had quadrupled. Today, although prices have dropped slightly in the past few years, we are still paying over $1 per gallon for most gasoline.

I believe that everyone in this room agrees that energy is one of those items that separates thriving nations from poor nations. We all have our personal preference as to how we would like to see our Nation's energy mixed, but we all see the importance of having an adequate energy supply. There are some who believe that the emphasis should be placed on nuclear, or renewable, or fossil, or electricity, or any number of other energy sources. I believe it would be a mistake to leave synthetic off that list.

As you are well aware, retaining the Synthetic Fuels Corporation means spending the money to operate it. But let's analyze the true cost of keeping the Corporation. Currently, the Corporation has approximately $7.896 billion available to it. That's a chunk of money, especially now that deficits have become such an important issue. However, let's bear in mind that unlike most dollar figures that we consider, this is not an absolute dollar figure that will be spent in fiscal year 1986.

The SFC funding is through future price and loan guarantees which will have a minimal effect on the 1986 budget deficit. If the projects are successful, the loan guarantees won't be needed or will be repaid. If unsuccessful the price guarantees won't be utilized. Either way all of the funds won't be expended. In fact, this money may never be spent. It represents the money available to the corporation to distribute to deserving projects for the remainder of its lifetime.

My main concern is that this amendment would also severely compromise our national security. How? The Office of Technology Assessment released a study just last year that demonstrates the continuing vulnerability of the United States and our allies on imported oil from politically unstable countries. This is especially important to the Department of Defense which is heavily dependent on liquid petroleum fuels.

Today, we find imports accounting for about 30 percent of our energy use. According to former Secretary of Energy Hodel, domestic production will decline by almost 2 percent annually through the remainder of the 20th century. Should this forecast prove to be correct, that causes the 30 percent figure to jump to almost 50 percent. This is not a very comforting trend.

In 1983, the Department of Defense certified pursuant to Executive Order 12.242 that synthetic fuel is needed to meet national defense needs. The Air Force on October 3, 1983, announced its Program Rivet Shale which will utilize shale oil to validate its use as a jet fuel.

It quickly becomes obvious that our military is not only counting on synthetic fuels in the future, but will be dependent upon them as well.

Although I am extremely concerned with budget deficits, the ramifications of a 93 percent additional cut over last year's cut in the synfuels budget will effectively destroy an indsutry that has the potential to break U.S. dependence on foreign energy sources.

I am certainly not condoning a return to an $88 billion program. However, I am unable to comprehend how we will have an effective synfuels program developed for $500 million.

We must remember that synthetic fuels cannot be developed overnight. In fact, even if we continue to fund synfuels projects under today's conditions, the recent comprehensive strategy report indicates that a decade or more of commercial production is required to develop the synfuels option.

We have two choices before us. We can either accept the positive changes that the new Synthetic Fuels Corporation has proposed to get synfuels production off the ground, or we can allow synfuels production to die by eliminating the Corporation.

With an energy glut at the moment, we can delude ourselves into believing that never again will we be forced to deal with an energy crisis. Or we can face reality and continue to prepare for a possible future crisis. Why not act now instead of having to react to a crisis at some later date. Let's defeat this amendment and assure our constituents that they won't be forced to spend their Sunday afternoon drive parked in front of a gasoline station.

Congress needs to be looking into the future to address the needs of the American people. At the same time, we can learn many lessons from the past. I urge this amendment's defeat.

Mr. STRANG. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. STRANG. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the amendment.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to my good friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

□ 1800

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, it appears to be the judgment of the House to adopt this amendment whereby we are essentially doing in Synfuels; so be it. But at the same time, I would like to remind my colleagues that when we are deemphasizing the production of synthetic fuel in this country, there is another resource on the road to energy independence that must be utilized, and that is the Outer Continental Shelf.

I am sad to say that our Secretary of the Interior, sincere, but in poor judgment in my view, has recommended a proposal relative to offshore drilling in California that is not in the interests of this Nation or the people of the State of California because it locks up too much of our hydrocarbon resources that this Nation badly needs for procuring energy independence. I hope to convince my colleagues in this House that the energy needs of America should be emphasized in terms of developing resources rather than locking them up. I want to bring that to my colleagues' attention and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I rise to strongly support the adoption of the Sharp-Conte amendment.

We need to close down the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. The record of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Investigation clearly shows the SFC has had excessive salaries, fringe benefits, luxury recommendations and travel. They have a pension which vests 50 percent in 6 months and 100 percent in 1 year.

The House of Representatives can save taxpayers over $6 billion. To protect the SFC while cutting social, education, farm, and defense programs would be unconscionable.

Finally, let me acknowledge the tireless work of my colleagues and their staff which made this vote possible and who will be the key to our future efforts in this matter. Mr. WOLPE and his staff member, Keith Laughlin, have battled the SFC from the beginning. Mr. SYNAR and his staff member, Rick Young, have strongly pressed the battle in the Energy and Commerce Committee. Mr. SHARP and the staff of the Subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels along with my other colleagues have worked hard to produce responsible legislation. Without the help of these members and their staff we would not be having this vote today. I applaud their efforts.

I urge my colleagues to vote yes on the Sharp-Conte amendment.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman this amendment will probably be the single largest deficit reduction vote of this session. Before its too late, the Synfuels tap on the Federal Treasury must be turned off for good. It's time to take decisive action before billions of dollars are squandered on projects with little or no merit. The corporate subsidies and giveaways for the fat cats of the oil industry have to be stopped now. We just can't afford it anymore.

The Conte-Sharp amendment, now before the House, would end the waste and abuse of the SFC by rescinding the remaining funds available to the corporation.

Specifically, the amendment would rescind all appropriations to the Corporation which have not yet been obligated. There are three exceptions provided in the amendment.

First, any funds necessary to liquidate obligations incurred under contracts entered into before enactment of the Interior bill are not subject to the rescisson;

Second, the funds transferred in H.R. 3011 for use in the Clean Coal Program are not subject to this rescission; and Third, $500 million is set aside in the energy security reserve to be used later if authorizing legislation is enacted. The amendment specifically prohibits the use of these funds for Synfuels projects of any kind.

With these exceptions, this amendment rescinds about $6.7 billion of the $7.9 billion currently in the energy security reserve and effectively shuts down the Synfuels Program as we know it.

Let me emphasize that this amendment does not affect in any way the funds proposed for transfer to the Clean Coal Reserve. That issue will be resolved later.

Mr. Chairman, back in 1980, when the Synfuels Corporation was first funded, synthetic fuels were the wave of the future. But since then, oil scarcity has turned to glut, and the price of imported oil has dropped dramatically. Just this week, we have been treated to the welcome news of OPEC oil ministers squabbling among themselves in an effort to stop the over-production and price cutting that threatens to destroy the cartel's stranglehold on the world oil supply.

During our debate on this issue last year, several members pointed to the instability in the Persian Gulf, the ongoing war between Iran and Iraq, and attacks on oil tankers, as evidence of the need to proceed full speed with the development of our synthetic fuel resources. What has the past year taught us?

It has taught us that despite continued and even increasing instability and conflict in the Middle East, our oil supply remains virtually unencumbered. Since last year, our dependence upon Middle Eastern oil has continued to decline, as ever-increasing portions of our oil imports come from our South American neighbors.

In fact, Mexico is now the Nation's largest foreign oil supplier, providing 14 percent of the total imports. Canada and the United Kingdom also rank high, while Arab countries today provide 15 percent of our total imports. Over all, we have reduced our reliance on foreign imports by 23 percent since the 1973–74 Arab oil embargo. And all this was done without the help of Synfuels.

Considering the current letters of intent, I find it hard to believe that the Synfuels Corporation can prevent gas lines or major oil disruptions as its supporters claim. Just look at the projects now under consideration. For example, the SFC has tentatively committed $365 million to the Northern Peat Project. If you can believe it, this project is designed to develop ways for burning "peat brickettes" in place of coal.

First of all, I hate to break the news, but this technology is nothing new or different. My Irish brethren and others have been burning peat for hundreds of years.

Second, with the largest coal reserves anywhere in the world, it doesn't make sense for this country to spend $365 million on a replacement for this fuel. My friends from the Midwest and others interested in expanding the coal market should take a close look at this project. And finally, I'm interested to know how "peat brickettes" can be used as fuel during a gasoline shortage.

The past year has also taught us that despite the best intentions of those who bailed out the Synthetic Fuels Corporation last year, the sweetheart deals, enormous subsidies, and outrageous lifestyles of Synfuels Corporation employees have continued.

With little activity in direct Synfuels financing, the SFC has managed to increase administrative expenses tremendously over the past few years. Expenses for the corporation this year are 33 percent more than the amount in fiscal year 1984, and the estimates for the next fiscal year are even greater. Despite the cries of reform, this excessive spending doesn't sound like efficient management to me.

As a result of continued filling of the strategic petroleum reserve, we are today in an even better position to withstand an enforced reduction in oil imports than we were a year ago. And thanks in large part to the hard work of Chairman YATES, SPRO will soon contain over 500 million barrels of oil, almost 100 days' protection against a total disruption of oil imports.

We've been hearing a lot over the past several months about the budget deficit—well, here's the best opportunity we'll see in a long time to make a real cut. At a time when budget conferees are talking about cuts in food stamps and increasing the taxes on our elderly Social Security recipients, how can we even think about continuing to pay Union Oil $1 million a day in price supports for 6 years—and that's in addition to the $3.4 billion in tax breaks!

When the budget conferees are talking about cutting transportation funds by 15 percent, how can we even think about providing billions of dollars in taxpayer subsidies to guarantee a return of over 20 percent for one of the most profitable companies in the Fortune 500.

How can we explain to those constituents back home who are breaking their backs 40 hours a week, sweating to pay taxes, that we didn't do anything to reduce the deficit, to bring down interest rates, to save billions of dollars when we had the chance?

Mr. Chairman, the Synthetic Fuels Corporation has had its chance. It should have been killed a year ago. The past year has given us just more of the same—more money wasted on staff perks and privileges, more money wasted on subsidies for oil companies to build plants that don't now and perhaps never will work, more money wasted on technology that won't be economical for at least 20 years, and more empty promises that the Corporation will be brought under control.

Just look at today's paper. The Energy Department had to rescue the taxpayer from the monster of Great Plains before another $720 million was wantonly devoured.

The Synthetic Fuels Corporation has proven beyond a shadow of a doubt that it is incapable of bringing itself under control. Now it is up to Congress to put this monster out of its misery.

I urge my colleagues to support the Conte-Sharp amendment and vote for fiscal responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

● Mr. BOLAND. I oppose the amendment offered by my colleague from Massachusetts. [Mr. CONTE.]

Mr. Chairman, we had this same argument on synthetic fuels last year. As a result of that debate, we approved a sizable rescission in the funds previously appropriated to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. We put the managers of that enterprise on notice, that we expected them to institute some administrative reforms. Changes have been made as a result of what took place on this floor last August, but some would not give the Corporation a chance to see the fruits of those changes.

Mr. Chairman, where are our memories? The arguments we have heard on this floor against the Synthetic Fuels Corporation would have us disregard both history and common sense. I remember the atmosphere in this Chamber 5 years ago when the Synthetic Fuels Corporation was created. The Members who voted to launch our Nation's synthetic fuels effort, and I was one of them, understood two things. We knew, that synthetic fuels were going to be expensive, and we knew, that neither the strategic petroleum reserve nor energy conservation were going to provide effective long-term alternatives, to imported petroleum. In the intervening 5 years, crude oil prices have fallen and our recollections of gas lines, factory closings, and early school dismissals have faded. You would think our energy problems had disappeared!

Some things have not changed since 1980. We all receive mountains of statistics on energy supplies and energy use. None of those statistics have ever led me to conclude, that petroleum is other, than a finite resource. No estimates which I have seen have shown, that domestic oil and gas reserves, either onshore or offshore are increasing. In fact, at least since the 1952 report by the Paley Commission, we have been warned that the United States will run out of oil and gas. We are not sitting on oceans of oil in this country and we are never going to be! And what's more, Mr. Chairman, our consumption of imported petroleum, after several years of decline, is again moving toward the levels of the 1970's.

In my judgment, synthetic fuels represent our only path to energy independence. We knew, or at least I thought we knew, when we created the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, that the road to commercial development was uncertain and likely to be expensive. We also knew, however, that when they were needed, synthetic fuels would look like a bargain at any cost. When synthetic fuels are needed, they are going to be needed, in quantities approaching the 2 million barrels per day of production capacity, which the Synthetic Fuels Corporation was charged with establishing. We simply will not have the time, to build the plants necessary to produce synthetic fuels in those quantities if we wait until a time of crisis to get started. You can do all of the research you want, and do small demonstration projects until there is not enough warehouse space at the Department of Energy to store them all. But if the necessary synthetic fuels plants are not in operation when the next crunch comes, all of the fancy blueprints, and academic treatises, we will have purchased with the kind of program envisioned by the supporters of this amendment will be of little comfort.

It remains incumbent on this Congress to encourage the development of those alternative fuels on which our Nation's future will depend. Synthetic fuels are those alternatives, and we dare not allow a complacence, brought on by a temporary oil glut, to make us lose sight of the need, to have them available when they are needed.

I urge the defeat of the amendment.●

● Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Sharp-Conte amendment. We have before us today a rare opportunity. With this one vote we have the opportunity to reinstate a sound and reasonable synthetic fuels development program and, at the same time, save the taxpayers more than $6 billion. By voting yes on this amendment, we can bring to an end the most wasteful and unproductive agency in the Government today—the Synthetic Fuels Corp. We can demonstrate to the American public that we are serious about addressing this Nation's deficit problems and we are serious about cutting unnecessary Federal spending.

As I have often stated in the past, the vote before us is not a vote on our commitment to energy security. Rather, it is a vote on how we as a government can utilize a limited—and I emphasize limited—amount of Federal resources to provide the most efficient and effective program to help develop synthetic fuels. After 5 years of turmoil and controversy, it is abundantly clear that the Synfuels Corp. is not such a program. In fact, the Synfuels Corp. threatens not only to squander billions of taxpayers' dollars on the senseless commercialization of uneconomic technologies, but it likewise diverts precious tax dollars away from the kinds of programs that offer the greatest promise for enhancing the prospects of synfuels development.

We need not speculate on the prospects for commercial synfuels production. We need only to open our eyes. Yesterday, the administration determined that the SFC's proposal to provide an additional $720 million to the Great Plains project would not be in the best interests of the Nation as a whole. The message is clear. We as a Nation can simply no longer afford to commit the taxpayer to subsidy lifelines for technologies which cannot and will not for the forseeable future be able to compete in the marketplace. To do otherwise will serve only to promote technological inefficiency at enormous cost to the American public.

The lesson to be learned from the Great Plains story is indeed a costly one. But the costs of this one sad story will pale in comparison to the disastrous consequences of our failure to act today. For if we cannot learn from the mistakes of our past, we surely cannot hope to improve our future.

As we debate today the future of this program, the future of this Nation remains hostage to the diminishing prospects of substantial long-term deficit reduction. We must get on with the critical task of reducing Federal spending and reducing Federal deficits. The real question before us today is a question of priorities and equity. It is a question of whether we as a Congress are prepared to say no to the family farmer, no to the elderly, no to the hungry and the homeless and yes to the handful of multimillion-and billion-dollar corporations that want Uncle Sam to pay their way to greater profits. It is a question of whether we as a Congress are committed to getting serious about this Nation's deficit problems and doing so in a fair and equitable manner.

Mr. Chairman, there is no Federal program that is more unnecessary, more unfair and more inequitable than the Synthetic Fuels Corp. It is time to acknowledge the errors of our past and offer promise for our future. It is time to put an end to the Synthetic Fuels Corp.●

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Sharp-Conte amendment.

The debate over the future of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation does not concern the advisability of developing synfuels technologies or the wisdom of pursuing energy security. There is widespread support for those goals. The debate is, however, over allowing the wasteful Synthetic Fuels Corporation to squander $6 billion at a time of soaring Federal budget deficits.

The SFC was established in 1980 and was given a $15 billion appropriation to create a commercial synfuels industry. Five years later, no one in their right mind would defend the record of the SFC. That well-publicized record is replete with numerous examples of extraordinarily wasteful administrative costs, incompetent management, and an almost total disregard for ethical standards.

But in addition to the waste and scandal, the miserable record of the SFC can also be tied to the marketplace. Despite the best intentions of the corporation's creators, 1980's dream of a commercial synfuels industry has faded into the harsh economic realities of 1985. It is now very clear to every expert in the energy industry that synfuels technologies will be unable to compete in the commercial marketplace at any time in the foreseeable future.

This fact is dramatically illustrated by the Department of Energy's decision yesterday not to agree to the SFC's bail-out of the hopelessly uneconomic Great Plains coal gasification project—the flagship of the Federal synfuels commercialization program.

An internal DOE analysis indicated that under a best-case scenario, oil prices would have to soar to $160 per barrel by the year 2009 for the Great Plains bail-out to work—and even under those unlikely circumstances it would still cost the taxpayer $2.6 billion!

There are two obvious lessons to be drawn from the Great Plains fiasco. First, it is clearly unwise to build commercial-scale synfuels plants at this time. And second, it is the responsibility of Congress to take decision action if a Federal agency is either foolish or reckless enough to waste the taxpayers' money on such futile ventures. The fact that the SFC was willing to spend public funds on something as unwise as the Great Plains project emphasizes the importance of adopting the Sharp-Conte amendment.

This amendment would prevent the SFC from wasting over $6 billion by rescinding all but $500 million of the funds available to the SFC and preventing the corporation from entering into any additional contractural agreements. The adoption of this amendment would prevent the SFC from indiscriminately shovelling money out the door while authorizing committees consider legislation to abolish the SFC and reestablish a synfuels program at DOE.

As I stated at the outset, critics of the SFC do not oppose the development of synthetic fuels or the goal of energy security. We are convinced, however, that a revitalized effort at the Department of Energy would save the taxpayer billions of dollars, while providing the technical experience necessary to better utilize synfuels technologies when the marketplace is more favorable at some point in the future.

Mr. Chairman, there is a growing consensus, both inside and outside of the Congress, that it makes absolutely no sense in terms of energy policy or budget policy to allow the SFC to continue with its grandiose spending plans.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support the Sharp-Conte amendment and prevent $6 billion in wasteful Federal spending.

● Mr. SHUMWAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment, offered by my colleague, Mr. CONTE to rescind all funds for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation except for $500 million, to be authorized at a later date.

In the few short years since its inception, the SFC has a track record that can charitably be described as disappointing. In fact, it should more aptly be described as the greatest example of Federal subsidization and Government boondoggle in the history of American Federal programs. While most in Congress in 1980, including myself, thought that Synfuels was an idea whose time had come, I will be the first to say that its performance to date has been, at best, abysmal.

In the 4½ years of its existence, the SFC has produced a trickle of expensive alternative energy and barrels of scandal. If one were to employ the traditional cost-benefit analysis in assessing the performance of this program, even the most ardent supporter of a national energy policy would have to admit that the American taxpayer is not seeing any return on his almost $7 billion tax dollar investment. Indeed, the time is right to reevaluate the SFC.

This is not to say we should overlook or ignore the need for a national energy policy. A national energy policy is a vital component of our national security policy. We should never be in a position of dependence upon foreign supplies of oil. However, the SFC is not the answer. Even if we have another fuel crisis—and the possibility exists—there are better agencies that can cope with the situation. And there are more economical ways to do so.

Right now, we are asking the American taxpayer to pick up the $7 billion tab for what is recognized as an economically unfeasible plan. That is an incredible amount of money, particularly at a time when we are suffering under the crushing weight of a monstrous Federal budget deficit.

Mr. Chairman, let us face this challenge head on. I urge my colleagues to support this amendment. Let the House work its will regarding this vital issue, and make a substantial effort to reduce our staggering budget deficit.●

● Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. This is a sad day for the House, which through voting for this amendment will turn its back on a real national security need. This requirement for a secure supply of liquid fuels is no less compelling now than it was 5 years ago when the SFC legislation was enacted. It is all too easy of a vote through which the Members of this body think they can demonstrate fiscal responsibility. Yet it is merely budgetary slight-of-hand, because there are no significant outlays of money connected with the rescission of outstanding budget authority for the next several years. Further, it is an insult to the memory of a great Senator who was the congressional architect of the Energy Security Act, Henry Jackson. He clearly saw, as did the majority leader of the House, the strong and persistent connection between synthetic fuels development and national security.

In the debate on previous synthetic fuels issues, I have mentioned that the corporate memory of the House of Representatives had become blurred with respect to the original motive for encouraging synthetic fuels development. A "yes" vote on this amendment will mean that we are erasing that corporate memory entirely and that the House has, in fact, forgotten its original strong motivation for enacting the Energy Security Act. To my conservative friends, I would point out that the original synthetic fuels legislation in the House, the amendments to the Defense Production Act, received overwhelming support. The major difference between that legislation and the later enacted Energy Security Act [ESA] was the amount of funding provided for government support of commercial-scale plants. This nearly order-of-magnitude increase in authorization in the ESA recognized the fact that the technologically diverse plants to be built would not be economical. Nevertheless, the Congress believed it was important for the country to learn about new technologies at scale through the operation of these prototype plants.

I have no disagreement with those who would say that the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, as an instrument, is seriously flawed. I have stated on numerous occasions that Mr. Stockman could not have planned a more Machiavellian approach to kill synthetic fuels development if he had chosen the various members of the board himself and directed its operations. Nevertheless, reducing the SFC budget authority to zero does not seem to me to be the appropriate way to protest poor board appointees or the SFC's inability to act decisively. It is as if we have concluded that by taking away a carpenter's broken tools, we will preclude any further need to build.

I would remind my colleagues that the Department of Energy's demonstration program for coal conversion was killed by Mr. Stockman and shortsighted economics in the 1981-82 time period.

The loss of those demonstrations put an added burden on the SFC to address a diversity of technologies in order to assure synfuels development across a broad front in terms of our plentiful domestic resources—coal, tar sands, shale, and so forth. Now we are suggesting that the country no longer needs to learn whether these technologies can work reliably at commercial scale, which is a necessary step toward getting any handle on improving the economics. The oil glut and soft prices are economically comforting but they shouldn't lull us into inaction. These circumstances have removed the economic incentives for the private sector to invest significant funds in such development, so there is an even greater need for Federal involvement than 5 years ago. If we want to prove these technologies, we must recognize that temporarily plentiful energy supplies only buy us time.

We have some Members who, although they support acid rain controls, neither desire clean coal technologies nor improved processes for converting coal to clean-burning liquids and gases. I cannot imagine how they can project such a naive energy future. I feel proud to have authored one of the prime mover pieces of clean coal legislation, but when I did introduce it, it was intended as a complement to a limited, but viable, SFC program. Now we are told that we need not encourage synfuels or even clean coal programs at significant funding levels, despite the fact that the U.S. import fraction for liquid fuels is back to the same level as it was in the late 1970's. I maintain that this is a national security vote for those of us who believe in the broad definition of national security; that is, that which includes our long-term, vital economic interests. We should be alarmed by this suggestion that the short-term market should be the final arbiter of both our defense and energy policy. Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to defeat this amendment. Otherwise, I believe that the House will be called into account on this issue sometime within this decade and will certainly be found wanting. Thank you.●

● Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Clean Coal Technology Fund and urge my colleagues to oppose any amendments that would reduce funding for this very important 3-year program.

Despite being the Nation's most abundant natural fuel resource, coal has not received its fair share of Federal research assistance in recent years. Last year when Congress rescinded funds from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, it went on record in support of developing new coal cleaning technology. Now, just 1 year later, it seems that some want to seriously reduce our commitment to using coal in a more environmentally acceptable manner.

Moving forward to develop emerging coal cleaning technologies would provide new methods for using coal in much more efficient and cleaner ways that can currently be achieved. One example of a new technology that requires a full scale demonstration is limestone injection.

Limestone injection entails burning limestone with higher sulfur coal in a boiler. This process, if successful at the commercial powerplant scale, could substantially reduce sulfur dioxide emissions from coal fired utility boilers at a fraction of the cost of state-of-the-art scrubbers. There is no way of knowing whether or not this process will be successful unless we try it. The clean coal reserve was designed just for that purpose—to test new technology at the demonstration scale in order to facilitate commercialization.

Some would argue that this entire proposal is nothing but corporate welfare. This is of course untrue. Each demonstration would have to receive at least half its funding from the private sector. To me this represents a fair balance between government and business. I would also point out that a number of projects listed in the Department of Energy report to Congress on emerging clean coal technologies lists projects that would involve substantial cost sharing on the part of the private sector. This entire project must be viewed as an investment in the Nation's economic future.

Successful demonstration of new technology offers an opportunity for the creation of new businesses. Not only would existing companies build these newly proven technologies at the commercial level, but undoubtedly many new firms would come into existence.

In addition to creating new business opportunities and new jobs, the ability to use coal in a cleaner fashion could spark additional demand in the coal industry. Mr. Speaker, I need not reiterate the deplorable conditions in the coal fields. The decline of the steel industry, coupled with fewer export opportunities and the serious threat of coal imports from South America has been devastating to the coal industry.

The ability to use higher sulfur coal would bring new opportunities to coal producers, but it would not be limited to just miners and operators. This new prosperity would also be shared by local merchants and local governments that often have to rely on the coal industry.

Mr. Chairman, if we vote to reduce our commitment to clean coal today, chances for developing new technology will be seriously hindered. Both the Department of Energy Research Advisory Board and the Office of Technology Assessment determined that our current policy of abandoning development after the proof of concept stage has sent confusing signals to the private sector about our commitment to support new technology development. In most cases the loss of Federal interest has led to a rude halt in the development process. When that occurs no one benefits. Thousands of dollars are spent, but the job is not completed.

Mr. Chairman, there is one other key issue at stake here. Just yesterday the Commerce Department announced the June trade deficit. We all know that a very substantial part of the trade deficit is caused by our continued reliance on imported oil. The ability to use an abundant natural resource in both traditional and new ways would certainly reduce our dependence on foreign sources of oil and help us reduce the trade deficit. There is also the possibility that some of these new technologies could be exported to other nations that possess high quantities of coal.

In closing, I firmly believe that we must not turn our back on the commitment we made to fostering coal cleaning technology last year. Any reduction in funding would do just that. The clean coal reserve is in line with the House budget resolution and should be viewed as an investment in the future.

I urge defeat of any amendment that would weaken the reserve fund.●

● Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Sharp-Conte amendment to abolish the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation. Listening to the debate on the future of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation makes clear to me that many of us are not aware of what has been happening at the Corporation since its new Board arrived last December.

Remember, Congress last year recinded a total $7.375 billion—or nearly half—of SFC's funding. The Board members who took office in December immediately began to give the Corporation a new direction, which is clearly stated in its statement of objectives and principles, its new business plan and the comprehensive strategy report sent to Congress on June 30. The Corporation is now deemphasizing near term production and concentrating on a few pioneer plants of minimum commercial size that will provide the knowledge and experience needed for the future development of a commercial industry. The SFC is looking for the most cost-effective way to provide for the Nation's synfuel needs when market considerations or national security requirements dictate. The most wasteful thing we could do would be to develop a synfuels industry under "crash" conditions. If we kill the Synfuels Program now, this is exactly what is likely to happen in the not-too-distant future.

Mr. Chairman, the Corporation is scaling down multibillion-dollar projects to a size consistent with commercial operation that will provide the operational, management, health and environmental experience we need to move forward on a sound basis. The new SFC Board is moving forward in light of new energy and budget realities, and we should give it a chance to complete the job.

The Corporation is taking a cautious and prudent approach to assisting projects under difficult enomomic and technical conditions. I believe that approach deserves our support.

Mr. Chairman, the argument we hear most often against SFC is that it has been wasteful and that killing it is a "$6 billion vote" which will give us immediate budget deficit impact. Do not be deceived by these arguments. The immediate savings by abolishing SFC is only $14 million, I repeat, $14 million. The CBO reports that the budget impact for fiscal year 1986 would be $14 million in savings. On the other hand, if we abolish SFC now, DOE would immediately have to seek $1.5 billion from this body to pay off the loan to the Great Plains project which DOE guaranteed. I emphasize that this would contribute directly to current year deficits. From a strictly current dollar analysis, abolishing SFC now would be fiscally irresponsible.

The new Board has also moved aggressively to correct earlier managerial weaknesses and to address waste and charges of ethical improprieties. The SFC, for example now fully conforms to the standards of ethical conduct and financial reporting proscribed from Federal officers and employees. The Corporation staff has also been reduced—from 170 in December when the new Board took over to 144 this month. Other actions of a smiliar nature are also taking place.

Mr. Chairman this country needs a Synthetic Fuels Program—everyone agrees on that—but the Department of Energy can't do the job that is needed, with its emphasis on research and development alone. The Congress recognized this problem when it set up the SFC and gave it—and not the Department of Energy—the mission of creating a commercial scale program. The same reasons exist today why we should continue the program through the SFC.

It is time that we dealt with the facts in voting on the future of the SFC. We need a Synthetic Fuels Program, and we need it at a commercial scale. The new Board is making significant progress toward that programmatic goal at the same time as it moves to correct past management deficiencies.

We should continue the program, and I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on the amendment.●

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, as I understand the situation, the gentleman from Massachusetts has claimed 30 minutes in favor of the amendment. The Chair, to the best of my knowledge, has not assigned the 30 minutes to the opposite side of the question. If that is the case, Mr. Chairman, I would like to demand the opposite time.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, a Member opposed is entitled to 30 minutes. If the gentleman seeks to use it, he can request the time and the Chair will allocate it.

Mr. McDADE. I now request it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE] for 30 minutes.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, we have heard many arguments—both pro and con—regarding the future of the U.S. Synfuels Corporation. And I will not add to the discussion about dollars, or individual projects, or questions of individual project viability. There is no need to rehash these points.

I will say to my colleagues that I am deeply concerned, concerned about how we are acting and why. I do not believe that we are giving enough thought to our Nation's future energy needs and that some are giving too much thought to their November needs.

History repeats itself, and history tells us that the future in the Middle East is not bright. We face the distinct possibility of major conflict in that region—a conflict that can send oil prices soaring.

We saw that very thing happen as a result of the Yom Kippur war of 1973 and the concurrent formation of strong, hardline positions on the part of OPEC.

Have we forgotten gasoline rising from 35 cents to over $1 per gallon? Have we forgotten hours of waiting in line to purchase scarce fuel? Have we forgotten the feeling of having our entire economy held captive to the whims of another group of nations? Or do we believe that because of current situations that, this too, will never again occur?

The evidence is clear, many reports have been completed. My dear friends, the majority leader, has spoken several times of the 1952 Paley Commission Report that forecast almost 30 years ago what would happen in the United States if we didn't change our oil consumption policies. They said if we didn't change we would face severe problems in 20 years—they were only off by a few short months.

Are you willing to gamble the future of this country's energy independence, the future of our children on the future goodwill of the OPEC nations? Will this shortsightedness that is being displayed today ensure that our Nation will be protected from major energy shortages in the future? The answer, my friends, is no.

In 1983, in tests conducted by the International Energy Agency, it was concluded that if economic forces supported by the administration are put into place, the price of crude oil could increase to as high as nearly $100 per barrel if there is even a partial blockade of Persian Gulf oil—is that worth the risk others advocate taking today?

As Members of the Congress of the United States we have the responsibility to insure that this Nation does its best to provide for the safety and security of its citizens. We must have the vital information that will be gained from the Synfuels Corporation project to make rational, responsible choices for the future direction of our energy policy.

To limit our technological development capability to just oil shale and coal gassification—then we are no better than an ostrich with its head in the sand. If we limit our ability to make sound, informed decisions on our energy policy, then we will surely find ourselves staring the 1973 oil embargo in the face again.

Look to the Republic of South Africa and their experience in synfuels. Thirty years ago they made a firm commitment to this technology with the hopes of protecting their economy from energy over-dependence. Today, they have three commercial scale synthetic fuel plants and are virtually secure from any large scale price increase or oil flow interruption.

Can we really expect to find another reserve of domestic oil, another Prudhoe Bay, in the next 10 years? Can my colleagues here assure me that our economic recovery we enjoy today will not turn into a catastrophic recession if war erupts in the Middle East and prices double, triple—or worse—overnight?

Give me that ironclad assurance and I will support your efforts to gut the Synfuel Corporation. But as you can't provide such assurances and the gentlemen offering the $6 billion rescission know that they cannot provide such assurances, then I say to all my colleagues to do the responsible thing oppose this amendment.

Fix synfuels, change the management, address the concerns, but do not destroy 5 years of work, research and effort for election year politics.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McDADE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman propose to use any of his time? I am merely trying to find out how we are progressing. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], as I understand it, is just about through with his statement on his amendment.

Mr. McDADE. Never would I foreclose my friend from Illinois. I just want to protect the opposite side of the question. There are many Members with strongly held feelings that this is the wrong course, and they want to be heard on it. I wanted to make sure that if they do want to be heard, there was time for them.

We have made an agreement, and I commend my colleague from Illinois for doing so. I do not intend to use the time of the House. I want to voice my opposition to the amendment.

Mr. YATES. If the gentleman will yield further, may I ask the gentleman then, does the gentleman object if I ask the Chair to proceed to a vote?

Mr. McDADE. Not at all.

Mr. YATES. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote on this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 312, noes 111, answered "present" 1, not voting 9, as follows:

Messrs. ALEXANDER, MURPHY, LUNDINE, SAVAGE, DANIEL, and HORTON changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

CLEAN COAL TECHNOLOGY RESERVE

(TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

For the purpose of conducting cost-shared clean coal technology projects for the construction and operation of facilities to demonstrate the feasibility for future commercial application of such technology $750,000,000 shall be available to the Secretary of Energy, to remain available until expended, of which (1) $100,000,000 shall be immediately available, (2) an additional $300,000,000 shall be available beginning October 1, 1986, and (3) an additional $350,000,000 shall be available beginning October 1, 1987, such sums to be derived by transfer from funds appropriated to the "Energy security reserve" in the Department of the Treasury by the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1980 (Public Law 96-126) and subsequently made available to carry out title I, part B of the Energy Security Act (Public Law 96-294) by Public Laws 96-304 and 96-514: Provided, That such amount shall be from the amount of $5,700,000,000 initially available only for obligation to projects with Letters of Intent authorized by the Board of Directors of the United States Synthetic Fuels Corporation on or before June 1, 1984: Provided further, That the Secretary shall not finance more than 50 per centum of the total costs of a project as estimated by the Secretary as of the date of award of financial assistance: Provided further, That cost-sharing by project sponsors is required in each of the design, construction, and operating phases proposed to be included in a project: Provided further, That financial assistance for costs in excess of those estimated as of the date of award of original financial assistance may not be provided in excess of the proportion of costs borne by the Government in the original agreement and only up to 25 per centum of the original financial assistance: Provided further, That revenues or royalties from prospective operation of projects beyond the time considered in the award of financial assistance, or proceeds from prospective sale of the assets of the project, or revenues or royalties from replication of technology in future projects or plants are not cost-sharing for the purposes of this appropriation: Provided further, That other appropriated Federal funds are not cost-sharing for the purposes of this appropriation: Provided further, That existing facilities, equipment, and supplies, or previously expended research or development funds are not cost-sharing for the purposes of this appropriation, except as amortized, depreciated, or expensed in normal business practice.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CONTE

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONTE: On page 45, in line 25, strike "$750,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000,000" and on page 46, line 1, strike from "of which" through the end of line 4.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, my amendment is designed to restore a measure of fiscal responsibility to the bill and at the same time provide a significant Clean Coal Demonstration Program.

As reported H.R. 3011 transfers $750 million available to the Synfuels Corporation through the energy security reserve to the Department of Energy for clean coal research projects; $100 million is transferred in fiscal year 1986; $300 million would be automatically available in fiscal year 1987, and another $350 million would be available in fiscal year 1988. These outyear transfers would not be subject to further congressional action. In effect, we're writing a blank check for three-quarters of a billion dollars without knowing how the money will be spent.

My amendment would delete the outyear funding provided for fiscal years 1987 and 1988. The amendment would not affect the funds provided by transfer in fiscal year 1986; $100 million—a generous amount for any new program—will remain available to start a clean coal demonstration effort next year.

Basically, I agree with the thrust of the proposal. It's important to provide new, environmentally clean options for coal use. However, considering our attempts at fiscal restraint in all programs, it's difficult to justify the advanced funding of a new Government subsidy for projects and research currently sponsored by the private sector. In fact, the electric utility industry has spent more than $500 million on coal related R&D efforts during the past 5 years, and plans to spend another $600 million over the next 5 years, mainly for clean coal demonstrations.

Industry and utilities—for a variety of reasons—have already begun to initiate highly efficient, environmentally clean coal-based technologies, and these are the same kinds of demonstrations that would be subsidized by the taxpayer under the proposed Clean Coal Program.

I'm also concerned that this program duplicates an extensive Federal effort to fund clean coal technology research.

Since 1981, the Federal Government has spent more than $2 billion on clean coal R&D.

For fiscal year 1986, this bill includes $348 million in fossil fuels R&D, $250 million of which is specifically for clean coal. If $100 million for clean coal demonstration projects is added, the total Federal spending for clean coal in fiscal year 1986 will amount to $350 million. The administration requested only $150 million.

The Environmental Protection Agency is also conducting R&D in this area. In fiscal years 1984 to 1986, EPA's budget calls for almost $50 million in clean coal work.

Finally, the multiyear funding provided in this bill is contrary to the agreement reached last year on the Synfuels recission. The conference report on the continuing resolution clearly stated that any funding for the clean coal technology reserve would be "subject to annual appropriation" by the Congress.

In addition, the statement of the managers explained that "annual funding for such activities is subject to appropriation by the Congress." In light of the Federal deficit, multiyear funding without meaningful review by the Congress—is a bad precedent for this bill and bad fiscal policy.

Mr. Chairman, if we're really serious about deficit reduction, how can we start a new, multimillion-dollar program and fully fund it for 3 years? How can we guarantee Government subsidies for large corporations when funding for the arts, natural resource management, and energy conservation programs face or uncertain future? It doesn't make fiscal sense, and it's not right.

My amendment to delete the outyear funding is designed to provide a well run, fiscally responsibly Clean Coal Program.

For fiscal restraint and good Government policy, I urge my colleagues to support my amendment.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. REGULA AS A SUBSTITUTE FOR THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CONTE

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. REGULA as a substitute for the amendment offered by Mr. CONTE: On page 45, line 25, strike "$750,000,000" and insert "$500,000,000". On page 46, line 2, strike "$300,000,000" and insert "$200,000,000". And on page 46, line 4, strike "$350,000,000" and insert "$200,000,000".

(By unanimous consent, Mr. REGULA was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, this is an issue that we need to address. I think by offering this substitute at this point we can debate the entire potential changes. We are really being faced with three choices. We can keep the $750 million. We can take the substitute that I have offered, which would be $500 million, a reduction of $250 million, or we can take the $100 million for fiscal year 1986 as offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

When I came to Congress I received a letter from a wise old gentleman in my district and he said, "Dear Ralph, you are leaving for Washington. Watch out for those pendulums."

That was good advice, because we tend in this body to swing from crisis to crisis. I can remember the speeches here in 1977 and 1978 as gasoline lines were sitting in all our districts, as people were saying, "Why didn't you do something? Why didn't you Members anticipate this?"

Schools were closing, churches, hospitals were fighting for fuel, many of our businesses did not have adequate fuel to meet their needs. People were laid off for lack of fuel, for industries. We had a crisis and everybody said, "Oh, we forgot to do something about providing energy independence."

We created the Synthetic Fuels Corporation in 1980, this body said, "Let's drill the Outer Continental Shelf. Let's find substitutes. Why don't we use this magnificent resource of coal?"

You have all heard the statements. The United States is the Saudi Arabia of coal, of energy, because of coal.

Today, there are no gasoline lines. The cost of fuel has dropped. We have an opportunity to legislate in a responsible way for the future.

If you read the literature, if you listen to the people who are taking a look down the road, they are saying that the trend is starting the other direction. Imports are up 8 percent over last year. The potential for another fuel crisis lurks across the horizon. When that happens, we will come back in here and the old pendulum will go back to the other side and we will have all kinds of speeches. I wish I had a CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in here to quote from some of the dramatic statements of my colleagues about the need to do something about the crisis. Here is a chance to legislate in a responsible, measured way, to avoid OPEC blackmail, to avoid a problem in the future in terms of energy independence.

We eliminated in the recent vote here a few minutes ago the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. We are not going to have onstream programs to develop alternative fuels, even though many other countries have done that.

This proposal would take away the ability to deal with clean coal. We do have enormous coal resources throughout the United States. It does give us the ability to have energy independence, but we have to develop new ways of using the fuel to avoid the problems of acid rain.

We get many Dear Colleague letters. We hear from people, "Let's do something about acid rain." Here is an opportunity to do that in a responsible manner.

Obviously, the bill does give multiyear funding. My proposal would give $100 million the first year, fiscal year 1986, as does the proposal of the gentleman from Massachusetts; but at that point he cuts it off.

I say let us appropriate $200 million for 1987, $200 million for 1988. This represents a reduction from the $750 million, but I think it is a responsible, measured response, to a future need.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. Yes.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman ought to point out his plan, as well as the committee's original plan, will require a 50-percent cost sharing by industry.

Mr. REGULA. That is correct. The bill makes a very tight requirement on cost sharing. We are saying to those who would develop clean coal technology, "You have got to put up half the money. You have got to go at risk along with the Government."

The problem with cutting it off at the end of 1 year is that those who would be able to do something in this field will say to themselves, "Why should we risk 50 cents out of every dollar, knowing that Congress may well chop off the second and third years, why even start?"

Therefore, we are not going to get the kind of projects we need.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to associate myself with the gentleman's remarks. I think the gentleman lays out the picture very, very explicitly.

We are a nation that always looks to the future; but past, present, and future coal has always been an important asset of this country.

Now we are seeing imports—can you imagine, we are seeing imports from other countries. In terms of coal we have this resource and all we want to do is continue our technology with respect to it.

Mr. Chairman, I have the deepest respect for my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, as he knows, but I think his amendment really ought to be looked at a little more closely.

I commend the gentleman from Ohio and I hope, frankly, that we can defeat the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts and show that we are a country that believes in all of our assets, all of our resources, all of the regions of this country, and we believe in our great natural resource of coal.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlewoman.

To keep the record straight here, the first vote will occur on the substitute and that would be a vote for the $500 million. I would urge my colleagues to support that.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from Ohio for his initiative and tell him that I wholeheartedly support him.

Now, the gentleman raised an interesting issue with the Chairman which is important for this body to know and that is the 50 percent cost-sharing. There is a requirement that 50 percent of the cost be borne by the private side; is that correct?

Mr. REGULA. That is correct.

Mr. McDADE. The gentleman has said, and I think it is important to note, that provision is in the law and the multiyear effort is to try to incentize the industry to develop the technology.

Mr. REGULA. That is absolutely right.

Mr. McDADE. So let me point this out and ask the gentleman if this is not also true. This is only clean combusting coal technology; is that not accurate?

Mr. REGULA. That is accurate.

Mr. McDADE. Now, is it not true, let me ask my colleague, that the problem today of acid rain, which affects the environment of this Nation, is primarily caused by the burning of unclean coal in point discharges; is that not accurate?

Mr. REGULA. That is correct.

Mr. McDADE. Now, is it not true that this technology is the only solution we have in sight to eliminate or mitigate the current problem of acid rain sweeping this Nation?

Mr. REGULA. That is absolutely right.

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, let me commend my colleague and let me remind the House that just a few days ago a lot of my colleagues made a number of speeches about the importance of clean air, and we all agree on it. Today is the day that we put our resources where our mouths were.

Let us back the amendment offered by my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, support him in his efforts to clean up the air and get rid of acid rain.

I commend the gentleman.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

I might add in conjunction with that that I do have a letter from the Environmental Policy Institute strongly supporting the full funding. They are supporting $750 million for clean coal technology.

A vote yes on this substitute is an environmentally positive vote.

I want to point out with the charts here, the top line is the energy requirement in electricity in future years. This is what we have in place. Unless we get clean coal technology, we are going to be forced to go to the Middle East as a fuel source to generate the electricity we need.

We have a choice tonight of either developing our own resources with clean air or becoming a dependency of OPEC in the years ahead.

I will yield to many of you, but I do want to go over the rest of the charts.

This chart is the amount of emissions we will get without clean coal technology. The line goes up sharply. If we develop this with the moneys we are proposing to make available, we will be able to hold down the emissions, to address the acid rain problem.

Again, the next chart essentially says the same thing. It just boils down to this. We spend the money, half Federal, half private, to develop a clean coal technology. It will let us use the enormous resources we have in this Nation. It will keep us from being OPEC dependent. A good environmental vote, avoid the long lines that were characteristic of the seventies.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky, a member of the committee.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me this time, and I want to associate myself fully with the gentleman's remarks, for making this issue very plain to all of us.

Another point that I think the gentleman might elucidate even more on, we are going to have to depend upon coal for the next several years. There is no other alternative. Nuclear has just not proved itself. It is either coal or without energy.

Those that are concerned about the environment, and with good reason for that concern, should vote for this bill. This gives the chance to clean up the coal and it is paid for.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] has expired.

(On request of Mr. ROGERS and by unanimous consent, Mr. REGULA was allowed to proceed for 5 additional minutes.)

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I continue to yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, this gives us the opportunity to clean up the burning of coal and to remove the possibilities that exist that acid rain is being caused by the burning and combustion of coal.

The utilities will be required to cost-share to the extent of 50 percent. We have got to realize that they do not have the wherewithal to raise the entire sums because they are regulated and their Public Service Commissions do not have the opportunity under the present rulings to allow them the risk of a long-term investment of the entire cost. So I commend the gentleman for that feature of the substitute that is a cost-sharing, 50/50 between the utility and the Government.

The 3 years is terribly important, as the gentleman has indicated, because the utilities just do not have the wherewithal, No. 1, financially to go into this thing on a 1-year basis; and No. 2, politically because they have been burned by us before. They switched, and we changed the law, and they were required to unswitch.

So I commend the gentleman and urge the support of this substitute and its final passage.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I usually do not disagree with my distinguished friend and colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. CONTE. If you look at the record, you will find both of us are probably in sync about 99 percent of the time. But this is one area in which we disagree.

Incidentally, the clean air technology reserve was established by Public Law 98-473. As a result of the Department making inquiries of industry on whether or not there would be any interest, the statements of interests that have come up to this point amount to 170 companies interested in getting into this program.

One of the arguments used by my colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. CONTE, was that we spent millions of dollars in clean coal technology. But we have not spent a dollar with respect to this kind of a reserve or this kind of a program. That money has been spent by demonstration programs.

The particular program brings in industry at 50 percent of the cost. Your substitute is a good one, $100 million in 1986, and $200 million in 1987, $200 million in 1988, I think that is a reasonable compromise and ought to be accepted.

Mention has been made here of the problems that acid rain propose, and not alone for the Northeast but for Canada, and actually now spreading into most areas of the United States.

This is one way that perhaps the worse pollutant of all—dirty coal—can be cleaned up, and there is no way at all that you are going to solve the acid rain problem unless you solve the problem of using cleaner coal.

So I want to commend the gentleman from Ohio for his substitute. I think it is the right way in which to move. I think it is the wise way, and I think in the long run it is an effective way to clean up acid rain. That is what we all desire. This program of a clean coal technology reserve will go a long way to produce that result.

Mr. REGULA. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. O'BRIEN].

Mr. O'BRIEN. Mr. Chairman, I support the substitute by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA]. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOLAND] and the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROGERS] said it all. I think that the strength of this House, if I may address myself to my friend and my ranking member of the committee, Mr. CONTE is in its diversity and not in its conformity.

This is an important amendment. It is very important to Illinois which probably has more coal in its cellar than any other State in the Union. My State takes little from the Federal Government in money coming back, paying taxes to support that government. We are 48th on the list of States in this respect.

So, speaking parochially, and in every other way, I support the substitute.

Mr. REGULA. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RAHALL. I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding and want to commend him for his efforts with regard to clean coal technology. The gentleman has been a real champion for coal on the Appropriations Committee, as well as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] the subcommittee chairman.

I regret that the gentleman has to offer this substitute of $500 million. I would rather see the House accept the $750 million and reject the Conte amendment on its own.

The gentleman has mentioned that this is the perfect time for us to debate clean coal technology, and debate where we should be headed in regard to our energy decisions in this country. We are not facing an OPEC oil cartel threat at the moment. We do not have the long gasoline lines. It is a time that we can reason in a calm, cool, collected manner.

The gentleman has mentioned that the threat of a Saudi cutoff of our oil is not hanging over our head today. But I think it is also worth pointing out that we have coming into this country today coal from foreign countries. And while it is not a major threat to our domestic producers at this time, the time could come when the floodgates are opened and we find that the United States is importing a majority of its coal. We can never be put in that position. That is like Saudi Arabia importing oil.

I say to the gentleman that now is the time for us to take the steps toward clean coal technology, toward developing our own domestic resources in a clean and environmentally sound manner, and the gentleman has well pointed out that this has the support of the environmental community.

So I urge rejection of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Conte amendment.

I think most of us agree there is a need for clean coal technology, and that a degree of Federal assistance is appropriate.

These new technologies will enable coal to be burned in a more environmentally sound manner, and will be more cost efficient.

Projects to be funded under the program will fall into the so-called process development stage of technology development. At present, there is a gap in industry's and Government's coal R&D programs. The clean coal technology reserve will be used to couple proof-of-concept with the commercialization stage by providing funds for semiworks projects.

Why, then, is a multiyear appropriation necessary?

The payoff from the large investment necessary for many of these clean coal technology projects is a decade or more away and as such, are not competitive with near-term investment options and needs. In most instances, these projects are not driven by predictable and specific market requirements and must be undertaken in an uncertain regulatory environment. For example, the Clean Air Act can change and a given technology can become obsolete before a return is ever realized.

Because of this situation, it is imperative that not only is Federal assistance provided to clean coal projects, but that some degree of certainty is there regarding the availability of funding.

The private sector must come up with 50 percent of the project's cost under this legislation, and will not be willing to make such an investment based on a single year appropriation.

Funds to continue and complete the project just might not be available under a single year appropriation scenerio.

As such, the risk becomes too high.

The certainty once envisioned of synthetic fuels is being eroded. The long-term energy future of this Nation is being abandoned.

Let us not do the same to the short-term energy future of this country.

For once, let us make a stand for clean coal technologies which will improve our environment, and provide a return to the consumer in the form of lower rates of electricity.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the Conte amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] has again expired.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have 5 more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, let me just make this point: There are a lot of Members who want to speak in opposition, and the gentleman from Ohio asked for 10 minutes originally, and we went along and we gave him another 5 minutes, and that is 15. Now we can yield here all night long if you want to stay here, and I will be glad to.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] have 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the subcommittee.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I support the gentleman. I think the gentleman has made a very eloquent and powerful statement, and I think the committee would accept the gentleman's substitute.

Of course, that does not allow us to accept it because it needs the consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

But, I would propound a parliamentary inquiry to the Chairman if it is parliamentarily correct. If it is parliamentarily acceptable, I would propose, if it is acceptable to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that there be allotted 20 minutes on each side, the time in opposition to the gentleman's substitute and in favor of his own being controlled by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], and the time on the other side being controlled by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA]. I make that in the form of a unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman's request on the Conte amendment and all amendments thereto?

Mr. YATES. That is the gentleman's request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, how is this time going to be controlled?

Mr. YATES. By the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

Mr. OBERSTAR. How is the time going to be regulated, on what basis?

Mr. YATES. Twenty minutes to each side.

Mr. OBERSTAR. The time to be allocated on the basis of those who were standing?

Mr. RITTER. I reserve the right to object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The request of the gentleman from Illinois is as follows: That all time be limited for the Conte amendment and all amendments pending to 20 minutes for the proponents, 20 minutes in opposition, the time to be controlled, 20 minutes by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and 20 minutes by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

Is there objection to that unanimous-consent request?

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, there are many of us who have prepared to speak on behalf of one side or another, and frankly, with all of these people standing, 20 minutes on either side is insignificant.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman object to 30 minutes on each side?

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Chairman, I think 30 minutes is sufficient.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I amend my request to be 30 minutes on each side, with the same time controls by the same two gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] will be recognized for 30 minutes to speak on the Conte amendment and all amendments thereto.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

□ 1850

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to my good friend and the ranking Republican on the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BROYHILL].

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my friend and colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

I think perhaps Members have already made up their minds on this, but I think it should be understood very clearly that a vote for the Conte amendment is not a vote against the development of clean coal technology. The arguments being made here in the well of the House and on the floor in the debate just prior to my being recognized implied that the Conte amendment in some way is a vote against clean coal technology. This is just not true.

The Federal Government has been heavily involved in clean coal R&D for a number of years. I have in my hand a letter from the Secretary of Energy who says, and I quote:

> The Government is already playing a significant role in the financing of longer-term more generic clean coal related research.

It goes on to say:

> During the first term of this administration (fiscal years 1981 through 1985) more than $2 billion have been appropriated for fundamental clean coal R&D.

Mr. Chairman, the measure that we are debating today, the appropriation bill, continues that commitment to clean coal. All that Mr. CONTE's amendment does is to delete the extra amount of money that the committee has put in here for this.

In fact, the Conte amendment would permit an additional $100 million to be spent in fiscal year 1986 on demonstration projects over and above that which has been expended in the prior years.

Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] confirm that?

Mr. CONTE. If the gentleman would yield, the gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. BROYHILL. What we are saying is that the Conte amendment constitutes a substantial and significant Federal stake in the search for economical methods of burning coal in an environmentally acceptable manner. So all we are saying is: Why do we want, here at a time when we are cutting back on spending programs that are helping our constituents and here are saying we are going to spend another $650 million in taxpayer funds for clean coal projects in fiscal years 1987 and 1988? This is a difficult time, it is an extremely difficult and sensitive time that we make these budgetary decisions, but it is all the more important that we exercise some fiscal restraint. It seems the least that we can do is to respect the House budget resolution targets. I am not convinced that the House budget resolution as a whole goes far enough, but it seems to me the least we can do is respect the House budget resolution targets.

I want to make another point. You know, Mr. Chairman, we just had a vote here with respect to the synthetic fuels program. We voted on an amendment that has the purpose of cutting back on the spending for the program. That was based on the fact that we had determined that the Government cannot allocate funds properly and I am saying that here the day that we cut our money for SFC we are creating a new multiyear subsidy for a new kind of program. I would hope that we would avoid doing that.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes and 20 seconds to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER].

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio. I would like to clear up a few areas which I think are very important in this debate. One area is the amount of work that the Department of Energy is doing in clean coal technology. The figure of $250 million which was presented to you is basically the figure for the entire coal R&D Program.

Now some of those are long-range R&D programs that relate to clean coal. Others, like fuel cell research, heat engine research, underground coal gasification, magneto hydrodynamics, are very long-range programs. I would suspect a good $100 million out of $250 million is not clean coal research and the other $150 million is rather long-range work in coal.

Another critical point is: Why 3 years as opposed to 1 year? Well, industry has watched this Congress pull the rug, good or bad, out from under the Synthetic Fuels Program and to put forward a 1-year program at $100 million simply will not attract the kind of support that is necessary at a very strict 50 percent cost-sharing requirement on the part of industry.

So if we want industry in this program, let us build it out a little bit more long range. I would like to refer to a speech given on the floor of this House on July 23, 1985, by the gentleman from Massachusetts. The gentleman said that acid rain is a clear and present danger to our environment and to our health, talked about every day; more than 166,000 tons of sulphur and nitrogen oxide are spewed into the air.

He said the Congress has stalled on this issue for too long. It is time to face the facts and take a stand.

Well that is what we are trying to do here today. The gentleman said that acid rain is out of control. This is one way to get acid rain; it is the best way. A scrubber for 1,000 megawatts worth of power generation costs twice as much as this entire 3-year program.

So it is a real good investment. OTA is talking about $3 billion to $4 billion a year as the world's most expensive Band-Aids applied to scrubbing and cleaning stack gasses, postcombustion. That is largely the procedure of cleanup in the acid rain legislation.

The best way to get rid of sulfur oxides is to clean it out of the coal before it goes up the stack. Also let me mention that it is not just utilities that are important here. A lot of sulfur-emitting industries are our basic industries like copper smelters. And if we want to help our basic industries to be clean enough to meet Clean Air Act standards, we are going to have to do some programs like this. If we want utilities which are highly regulated and we find difficulty making the kinds of long-range investments to get involved in preemptive sulfur cleanup we are going to have to do programs like this.

So I believe, in this case, there is an appropriate and limited Federal role in comparison to the kind of programs we have seen in synfuels, this is a limited role for the Federal Government.

I might also add that in a climate which opts against the use of the nuclear option for electric power generation, we have coal; we have lots of it; we should start burning it far more cleanly than we have, and I strongly support the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I thank my distinguished friend, and I yield to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. KAPTUR].

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Chairman, I rise today in support of clean coal technology reserve and against the proposed amendment. I do this for several reasons.

I believe strongly that clean coal technologies can be that new approach. First, coal represents America's most abundant energy resource and is a key to achieving greater self-sufficiency. Some would rename the coal belt that lies between Pennsylvania, Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, Illinois, Indiana, Energy Valley U.S.A. The Northeast/Midwest region's demonstrated reserve base contains enough coal for 750 years of consumption at 1982 levels. In fact, just these States have as much coal energy in Btu's as the entire Middle East on which this Nation has become so dependent. The only difference between the Btu's we have under ground in the United States compared to the Middle East, Saudi Arabia, Iran, Iraq, Libya, Algeria or Kuwait, and so forth is that our Btu's are in solid form and theirs are liquid.

Second, it is ludicrous that the United States is importing $57 billion of oil, fully one-third of all oil consumed in America. Our country has become as dependent on foreign oil as we were before the Arab oil embargo of 1973.

Congress has debated the difficult solutions to the environmental problems regarding acid rain, associated with the burning of fossil fuels for a number of years. For those of us who represent the Northeast-Midwest, the problem of acid rain has long been debated with no resolution in sight. No existing technology to lower emissions from industrial areas, or any attempt to arrive at a solution through regulation, has met with widespread support. Clearly, another approach must be taken.

I believe that clean coal technologies can be that new approach. for all of us who are concerned about the devastating effect of acid rain on our environment, clean coal technologies can provide a means of creating clean energy from our most abundant resource—coal. In order to burn coal in our industries and homes tomorrow, we must learn how to burn it cleanly today. Clean coal technologies will allow us to take the coal within our own borders—even the high-sulfur content coal found in our Nation's Northeast and Midwest region—and convert it into gaseous or liquid forms. This coal, once converted into these alternate forms, can then be burned with no environmentally hazardous byproducts. While we study alternatives that may one day provide relief from the acid-rain problem through scrubbers, regulation, and new taxes, let us not forget that we have an opportunity today to back a modest plan to deal with the acid-rain problem by opening up a new source of energy that relies on our natural resources and the technological advances of our people. The Department of Energy has received 175 submissions of interest on clean coal technologies. These submissions of interest from the private sector indicate that coal can be burned cleanly. We owe it to ourselves and the Nation to find out. Although there may be disagreement over the present acid-rain problem, there is little disagreement that effective action must be taken immediately. A vote today in favor of clean coal technology and against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts will support our efforts to solve the acid-rain problem.

Finally, before I yield back the remainder of my time, I would like to comment on one other point. It should be understood that this program prohibits Federal funding from exceeding 50 percent of a projects total cost, and requires participating industries to pay their share of costs throughout a project's life. Since we are requiring full 50 percent cofunding from the private sector in all phases of multiyear projects, we cannot expect private utilities and industries to take on the program seriously knowing the Federal Government may very well renege on its share of the partnership in future years. We need a program that inspires confidence and provides stability in our relationship with the private sector. I commend the efforts of the subcommittee and especially its distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, for their success in bringing to the floor a bill that addresses this concern. I commend their efforts, and I ask that the House support the wise actions taken by them and vote down this amendment.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Mr. Chairman. I thank my friend, the gentleman from Ohio for yielding time to me.

I rise in support of the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

We are at the Crossroads in Energy. Do we want to solve the so-called, acid-rain issue and use the best resource of the land in finding ways of burning coal more cleanly and becoming self-sufficient in energy. The Regula amendment will go a long way in doing that.

We need the outyears funding in order to attract the capital needed to solve this problem of burning coal more cleanly.

Because of time constraints, I will not be able to say what I had intended, but I hope my colleagues will vote against the Conte amendment and for the Regula amendment.

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. PURSELL. In just a few seconds, I wanted to ask where you are going to get the money to pay for the program.

Mr. GRAY of Illinois. Does the gentleman want me to answer that question?

Coming from the coal fields of Illinois, I can assure you in this particular instance that industy itself is paying 50 percent. We pay for it today in our electric bills. We have one utility in my district; 25 years ago we built it at a cost of $15 million, and the scrubbers on that one plant today cost $85 million.

So if we can come up with a clean control technology, we will save the money in electric rates.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE].

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Conte amendment and I want to make three critical points.

The first point is this: It is true that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], in his amendment reduces the outyear funding, but the fact of the matter is that every dollar of outyear funding provided for in the Regula amendment exceeds the budget targets.

We have not budgeted for any outyear funding for this program. So those of us who have voted to implement the House budget resolution, and reconcile against it, and have agreed to live within the goals set by the House budget resolution, now is the time to vote against efforts to exceed it, and every dollar that the Regula amendment puts in outyears exceeds the House target.

The second point, the Conte amendment respects the time-honored process of appropriating a year at a time. We have gotten ourselves into some deep trouble by trying to fund some of these programs on a long-term basis.

Witness the last vote on the Synfuels Corporation. Whether you were for the Synfuels Corporation or against the Synfuels Corporation, you sure have to recognize that the way we handled it proved to be pretty poor.

Now we are about to do the same kind of thing. I suggest to you we are better off taking it a year at a time.

The third point is that a vote for a Conte amendment is not a vote against clean coal. It is in fact a vote for clean coal. It would provide $350 million—that is no small amount of change—$350 million for fossil fuel research and development; about $300 million of which goes for clean coal technology.

Voting for the Conte amendment is not a vote against clean coal; it is a vote for clean coal, and at the same time it is a vote for budget restraint.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Tennessee [Mrs. LLOYD].

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment and in doing so, wish to reaffirm my support for the Clean Coal Reserve Program. I have been an advocate of this type of cost-shared research and technology demonstration program and, in fact, the basic concepts for the reserve were included in a Clean Coal Production and Utilization Demonstration Act, H.R. 5592, which I introduced in the 98th Congress. I am enthusiastic that the reserve has been delineated in the appropriations process, and I urge my colleagues to continue to support the reserve through outyear funding.

In recent years, we have seen the budgets for civilian energy research and development drastically decline, bringing some R&D programs to termination and others to barely viable level of research activity. We have also seen a moratorium placed on Government-funded technology development at any meaningful scale, placing the entire burden for pilot-plant or semiworks demonstration projects on the private sector. At the same time, paradoxically, the private sector incentives for such investment in clean alternatives to oil have lessened because of soft world prices. It appears that the private sector is willing to meet the technical challenge as evidenced by their submission of many quality proposals to a recent Department of Energy solicitation regarding clean coal technology development.

However, it is abundantly clear that industry alone cannot make the large financial commitment necessary to definitively prove the feasibility of emerging technologies in today's market climate.

Accelerating technology integration and development of clean coal technologies is critical if we are to deal with our future energy needs and related issues, such as acid rain. I think it would be unwise and even foolish to pretend that a 1-year funding of the reserve will do anything but provide false hopes in our efforts to bring these new technologies to a useful stage. Such an approach leaves too much uncertainty and there is simply not enough funding for the required technological diversity of pilot plants. We need to make a firm and sustained commitment to these projects if we expect any usable results. Let us not be so shortsighted in dealing with our energy future.

Another problem which has received more publicity recently is one of our future energy supply options. The bullish estimates of a few years ago of oil and gas reserves have been revised and present a less rosy view of our potential resources. The recently released OTA report on oil and gas concludes that the 1981 Department of Interior estimates of offshore oil and gas reserves were overstated by a wide margin. Recent explorations have also been disappointing in terms of discovery of additional reserves. Also, the potential costly development of some of these reserves is a factor to be considered when we look at our energy future from an economic perspective.

In concert with our future supply problems, we are now hearing more discussion on possible capacity shortfalls of electricity in the mid-1990's. In fact, one of the Senate committees has been having a series of hearings on this topic in an attempt to assess the various current predictions of the utilities with regard to electricity demand. Given our problems in getting nuclear plants online and the hesitancy of the utilities to go forward with any plant construction, be it coal or nuclear, makes it imperative that we continue to develop new technologies which will be available to meet our needs within a reasonable time period.

I would briefly like to mention the Clean Coal Reserve Program in the context of the acid rain issue. I have attempted to present a more cautious course of action than some of my colleagues who are seeking near-term regulatory solutions to the problem. Regardless of political pressures for complex policy decisions and the institutional barriers to the implementation of any such decision, whatever action is taken should be based on more knowledge than we have available to us at this time. Once the reasonable scientific certainties are established by the ongoing, focused research program as to precisely what are major problem pollutants and the related mechanisms behind their effects, we can then take legislative action to inhibit the formation of these major pollutants which cause acid rain. Meanwhile, the clean coal reserve will serve as the impetus needed for the development of environmentally benign coal technologies which will undoubtedly enhance our long-term efforts to combat acid rain. Wet scrubbers are not a desirable technology from the standpoint of generating large quantities of sludge and costly unreliable operation.

We have an opportunity to lay out a Department of Energy clean coal program which can serve as an enhancement to our ongoing fossil fuel development programs. Learning to burn our plentiful coal cleanly will ensure some flexibility in achieving a reasonable future energy resource balance.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the amendment which should be called the wet-scrubber technology preservation amendment.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COATS].

Mr. COATS. Mr. Chairman, it is difficult for me to rise and support the Conte amendment because I have been such a strong advocate of clean coal technology, and on the surface it appears that I am reneging on my support. That is not the case.

As the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] indicated prior to my remarks, there is an ample amount of funds available, which will remain after the Conte amendment is adopted, for clean coal technology; and this remaining amount will be in accordance with the budget that has been adopted by this House, which we should adhere to.

There will be $100 million left as the result of the Conte amendment in addition to the $250 million provided through the Department of Energy appropriations, most of which goes for clean coal research.

A continuing commitment to clean coal technology is important for this Nation for a number of reasons:

First, coal is an ample domestic resource critical to the energy security needs of this Nation.

Second, it is a vital source of existing electrical power; 55 percent of our electricity in the United States is generated by coal; 98 percent of my home State of Indiana's electricity is generated by coal.

Third, it is relatively low-cost power. The demise of nuclear power as an attractive economically feasible alternative points us toward the use and the need of coal.

Fourth, clean-burning coal can partially solve our acid rain problem and for environmental reasons it is important that we continue the clean coal technology.

As the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] said yesterday in this well, sometimes issues of paramount importance come before us and those issues have to take precedence. As important as funding for clean coal technology is, our current budget deficit is an issue of paramount importance.

We have here before us a proposal which will allow us to continue clean coal technology, but also deal with the budget in a responsible way.

For these reasons, I think it is important that we reject the proposal of the Appropriations Committee that is now before us, and adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. Chairman, it is easy for us to stand here and vote against appropriations when it affects someone else's district, or somebody else's project. The real test of whether or not we are going to get a handle and control on our budget deficit is when we are willing to take the floor and stand up and vote against projects that are near and dear to our hearts and that directly affect our own districts.

When we do that, then we will get control of this budget, and this is what we should do here today. I urge my colleagues to support the Conte amendment as a reasonable, rational, sensible approach to advancing clean coal technology, yet meeting our budget obligations.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE].

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by my colleague, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] and against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], which I think to be totally ill-advised.

It strikes out against clean air. If you are interested in clean air, this will be the litmus test, because this is where you spend your taxpayers' money.

Today, in about 20 minutes, you decide whether or not you are going to put tax dollars out there to try to get at the problem of clean air. And we have got to do it, I say to my colleagues, because the ravages of clean air in this Nation, of acid rain, can no longer be tolerated.

As I said before, a lot of people made statements about it the other day. This is the time to act. This is your litmus test. When you go back to your districts you will respond yes or no to technology that can defeat this problem, at least mitigate it, if not defeat it.

If you want to get rid of it, support the Regula amendment.

Let me point out something else. You saw a little bit ago that, as a body, we decided not to do anything with the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. Well, guess what it tries to do. It tries to take your resources of this Nation and make them clean, burn them clean. It was the only game in town until we decided to throw it out a little bit ago. And I hope we can rethink what we did.

Let me try to put a little bit of perspective on it. The amendment that was brought to us by the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Illinois, and my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, today had $750 million in it. We hear that that is a lot of money. You bet it is a lot of money. We hear a lot of people saying you cannot do that over multiyears. You are just getting ready to vote on an authoriziation for the Defense Department. Every weapons system you buy is 100 percent fully funded over multiyears. We had a debate in this House about multiyear procurement, because it saves your taxpayers money. Buy it over multiyears and the price comes down. To show you the cost of the competition in the Navy Department—I see some of my colleagues here who were in that fight—billions of dollars have been saved because we had the fortitude and the foresight to say we will engage in multiyear activities in a few selected instances. Why should we do it here? One, you have got to say to private industry, "We would like you to come on board." You are going to have a hard time, my friends. You are going to have a hard time. You said that to the people in the private side a few years ago through the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, and you pulled the rug from under them a little bit ago. See how many of them will respond. Let us hope they do, if you want to clean up the problem of acid rain.

Let me point out to you: $750 million is what I said the cost is this year. Do you know what? That is 4 days—not 4 months, not 4 years, not 4 weeks—4 days of our imported oil bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. ROEMER). The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE] has expired.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield an additional minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. McDADE. That 4-day fee, 4 days of imported oil will pay for this, at $26 a barrel. That is down.

We hear about the oil glut today. That is the low price ticket. Hobart Rowan, writing in the Post the other day, said, "Oil is a commodity." It can be $60 a barrel tomorrow. Crank that in. Do you know what the yearly cost of our Nation for imported oil is? $47 billion. And we are trying to say, "Let's develop our own resources," since we are acknowledged to be the Saudi Arabia of the coal world. Let us do it, and let us do it cleanly. Let us do it in a way that does not injure people.

I remember people dying in London because of smog created by dirty coal. I remember it in my own State, in Donora, PA. People with health problems died because of combusting dirty coal. Here we are now, trying to say as a nation, a great nation, we will commit 3 years worth of tax resources, $750 million, develop our own resources, develop our own energy in a clean environmental way. And people with little foresight in my judgment, oppose that effort.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. FIELDS].

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Regula substitute amendment and in support of the Conte clean coal amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I think there are several important points that need to be made and reiterated. First, the Regula substitute fails to cure the fundamental problem with the bill's clean coal provisions, and those are the provisions for multiyear funding. That is the central issue, that is the focus, that is the most important issue of this important debate.

The Regula amendment does not address funding for clean coal subsidies, but it does not alter the fact that each dollar spent in these out years would be beyond the House budget targets for fossil fuels outlays.

The Conte amendment supports the premise that is behind the Synfuels rescission movement, that Congress should not rush to commit itself to massive subsidies on a multiyear basis for new technologies demonstration projects.

The Conte amendment respects the House budget targets for fossil fuels and respects the tried and true process of appropriating moneys 1 year at a time.

The choice before us is not between Federal spending on clean coal technologies and no Federal spending on such technologies. The fact is that the Government has spent over $2 billion since fiscal year 1981 on clean coal research and development. This bill and the Conte amendment would continue this commitment by appropriating about $250 million for clean coal research and development in fiscal year 1986.

So we do have a significant Federal effort in this area. The Conte amendment would do nothing to detract from that effort. Indeed, the Conte amendment allows a significant expansion of the Federal commitment to commercialization of clean coal technologies by permitting the initiation of a new Federal subsidies program for demonstration projects, as provided in H.R. 3011, to the tune of $100 million in fiscal year 1986.

The Conte amendment, however, in recognition of current and projected budget deficits, and in pursuit of fiscal restraint and responsibility, would delete $650 million in additional funding for fiscal year 1987 and fiscal year 1988 for this new program provided in H.R. 3011. This would still leave $350 million for clean coal in fiscal year 1986—$250 million for research and development, $100 for subsidies for demonstration projects. I submit this represents a significant contribution to development of clean use of coal.

I urge my fellow Members to vote for both fiscal responsibility and clean coal development by adopting the Conte amendment but by first rejecting the Regula amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FIELDS. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROGERS. I am wondering how the gentleman would respond to this: It takes more than a year to build one of these clean coal facilities. It takes at least 2 to 3 years. If you fund for 1 year, which utility is going to say, "OK, I am on board," and spend a bunch of their money, when there is no chance or hope that they can depend upon us 2 years down the pike?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. FIELDS. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. There is already over $300 million in this bill for research and development of fossil fuels. It is on a 1-year basis. It is nothing new. We have been doing it for years.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GOODLING].

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, the Boston Red Sox could be a power. They are almost always a power, but they never make it. Why don't they make it? Well, for two major reasons. They do not have anybody coming in on relief. Second, they do not do any long-range planning. And, third, they do not spend any money. So they are always almost there.

Now, what does that have to do with the issue today? Well, first of all, I wanted to get the ranking minority member's attention and, second, I am young enough to remember 1976 and 1977. We never do any long-range planning, either, in this country, particularly when it deals with energy, and particularly when it deals with self sufficiency. So we found ourselves "had" in 1977 and 1976, and we have been paying dearly ever since.

So I think it is about time we do some long-range planning for an energy source that we do not have to depend on anybody else and so that we have clean air and we do not have an acid rain problem.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SKEEN].

Mr. SKEEN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding and I rise in support of the Conte amendment and in opposition to the Regula amendment. I will tell you why: We are not talking about clean air. You are not talking about acid rain. That is not the problem here. If you were, you would be debating nuclear energy generation. You know that this body is not going to do anything about that argument, but that would solve both of those problems rather rapidly. What we are talking about is clean coal. First of all, you ought to understand when you deal with coal you are dealing with a chemical and combustion problem different for every mine that is mined in the United State. This complicates the problem about how do you help any one single industry fight its problem in combustion cleanup. That is what we are trying to do with the money that we are putting in here. The reason I am supporting the gentleman from Massachusetts. I think Mr. REGULA is doing his job and doing it very well—but I want to say to you right now that in the private sector today there is a great deal of private enterprise money being invested in the problem of coal combustion on their own because of the very thing I mentioned at the outset. Every coal burner is a different combustion problem.

□ 1920

Right now there are some four to five major technologies that are being examined by these industries because of the type of coal that they buy. Whether it is from Kentucky, Illinois, Ohio, or any of the rest, including from my part of the country. I am part of the Coal Caucus. We produce a lot of coal in the State of New Mexico. Low sulfur coal.

We have a generator in the west Texas area that supplies a lot of energy to New Mexico and on their own is investigating what is known as the limestone injection multistage burner technique. You talk about air scrubbers.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. SKEEN] has expired.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman.

Mr. SKEEN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, let me run down just a few of the innovative types of technologies that are attracting private investment by these companies themselves. Gasification combined cycle; atmospheric fluidized bed; pressurized fluidized bed; limestone injection; flue gas cleanup; which is the scrubbers. Coal preparation; advanced combusters; coal slurry, and so on.

I think that if you have got this money in there for 1 year and then let us see what the technology does, then you can decide about multiyear advancement. I think that is where the big argument is. Whether or not you want to make this appropriation on a multiyear basis.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SKEEN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ROGERS. If it takes 2 to 3 years to build one of these machines, how are you going to attract a utility to invest for just 1 year, not knowing what is going to happen 2 to 3 years down the pike with the Public Service Commission overlooking their shoulder?

Mr. SKEEN. I would say to the gentleman they are doing that today, as we stand here, as we speak.

Mr. ROGERS. Where?

Mr. SKEEN. Right now, in Amarillo, TX.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. SHELBY].

Mr. SHELBY. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Conte amendment to H.R. 3011, and in support of the Regula amendment.

Several misconceptions surround this issue—we have heard that multiyear funding for the clean coal technology reserve is fiscally irresponsible. We have heard that the reserve is unnecessary. We have heard that this technology is not an appropriate use of Federal funds.

Mr. Chairman, these misconceptions should be dispelled. Let me begin by saying energy development through the use of clean coal technologies should be among our highest priorities. Coal is this Nation's most abundant energy source. Coal holds the most promising hope for America's energy independence. Coal's efficient use stands to benefit many thousands of unemployed mineworkers. A strong clean coal technology reserve offers us the chance to recognize and act upon these realities.

Hearings have been held in various House and Senate subcommittees which have borne out the value of demonstrating new technologies in clean coal. We must seek aggressive avenues for clean coal commercialization—the arrangement provided in this bill will supply those avenues through the reserve.

Avenues that will lead to real and tangible results require the funding commitment provided in this bill—on a multiyear basis. Three weeks ago the House Appropriations Committee panel appropriated $750 million for the reserve for fiscal years 1986-88 transferring the money from unobligated funds for the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

As we begin to tackle the difficult decisions arising from the problems of acid rain, we need to establish the technological backup that the clean coal technology reserve provides.

Progress cannot be achieved in developing new energy uses and forestalling greater costs in the future if we don't begin today to share in the responsibility.

Mr. Chairman, the reserve is fiscally sound. It is crucial to energy development. It is a responsible approach to the commercialization of clean coal technology. Best of all, it is a promising combination of public and private funds working toward a worthy goal. I urge my colleagues to defeat the Conte amendment, support the Regula amendment—and preserve solid support for the clean coal technology reserve.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL].

Mr. PURSELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Conte amendment. I come from the home of the world champions, the Detroit Tigers, and they never came down here and asked for a corporate subsidy. That is what we are doing here, and I suggest that the Conte amendment comes closest to meeting the test of trying to balance the budget.

I know it is very popular, but if you just look at the RECORD of the last few days, clean water was so important. We had to overspend the budget. Housing, NASA programs are terrific. Very popular. We had to add $150 million over the budget over 1985.

Customs was very important to us as a nation. The National Science Foundation; we asked another $50 million over the budget, over 1985. IRS was important; collect more money. We had to add more money to that budget. Law enforcement was also here and well debated. Now we have a military bill here that is $10 billion over budget and that has been pulled, thank God, because it is $10 billion over budget. Then we have the military construction budget; I understand that is over budget, although I have not looked at it.

So what is the litmus test here? I suggest to my colleagues that the litmus test is to stay within the 1985 freeze level and try to keep those budget dollars down so that we reduce the deficit, reduce our interest rates, and let the private sector use capital formation, use their R&D tax credits and invest in this without a corporate subsidy. I think the Conte amendment comes closest to that, and I congratulate him for offering the amendment and oppose the Regula amendment.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURSELL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. REGULA. I assume the Detroit Tigers will not want their boxes to be tax deductible; is that correct?

Mr. PURSELL. Probably not.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR].

Mr. OBERSTAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, it is really a shame to be here supporting a one-third cut in the funding of the Clean Coal Technology Act. One of the things we do poorly in this body is plan ahead.

Several years ago, President Nixon proposed a plan for energy independence. It is sitting on shelves in congressional offices; it is in mine, I am sure in others, gathering dust. We ought to be planning ahead. We ought to be thinking ahead about what we are going to do when the oil spigot is cut back or shut off by OPEC.

We live at their mercy. The argument has been made: Who is going to pay and how are we going to pay? I tell you, we are paying the bill now. We are paying $47 billion a year to OPEC for oil. We used to pay for all of our oil imports with the agricultural exports from the United States. Now, we can hardly pay half of the oil imports with what we export in agricultural commodities.

We ought to look ahead at the time when OPEC, at their whim, decides the time has come to jack the price of oil up and cut down the supplies. Now is the time to act, not when the spigot is cut off. Because when it is, I guarantee you, these Members are going to be back on this floor crying about new legislation to deal with the crisis.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PORTER].

Mr. PORTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, coal technology is terribly important to the United States. I went over to Bristol and to Grundy, VA, at the invitation of the United Coal Co. late last year and saw firsthand what is being accomplished in that area. I realize that coal technology is terribly important to my State of Illinois, which is really the Saudi Arabia of bituminous coal of this country.

But there is something even more important to Illinois and to the United States of America, and that is to shut off the flow of red ink that is immersing the future of our children, burdening them with $100,000 of extra taxes each just to pay the interest on the $2 trillion of debt that Congress has already run up and are leaving to them as their legacy.

Why can't this program wait with all the others and compete next year and the year after that as to its priority for funding? I believe it can stand on its own. It is a needed, important, and sensible program. But this is an appropriations bill. This is not an authorization. Multiyear appropriations could not even be considered if we had the responsibility to have a budget. But here we go again, making further commitments with no idea whatsoever whether we can fund them responsibly.

Many Members I have heard speaking against the Conte amendment pride themselves on their fiscal responsibility. I wonder how they can square that pride with a 3-year appropriation and no budget?

Mr. Chairman, I care greatly about coal research. I care greatly about the environment. I care greatly about Illinois and the viability of my State's economy. But I care even more about the future of my country. I know as you know, as everyone of you know that it is this priority, mine, and then that priority, yours, and then another priority and another, that when added all together create the deficits that are destroying the economic future of our children.

The burden we are passing on to them is unconscionable. It is unfair. It is wrong. At some point we have to say "no." This is a good point to do so.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER].

□ 1930

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Regula substitute and against the Conte amendment because the Regual substitute provides the kind of predictability and continuity that the gentleman from Kentucky pointed out is going to be vitally necessary if we are really ever going to see clean coal technology put into operation.

Mr. Chairman, the coal industry in the United States is in crisis. In the State of Pennsylvania, which I come from, we have bankruptcies every day. We have abandoned tipples, abandoned mines, people out of work, on the streets. At the same time, Mr. Chairman, we are continuing to import an increasing amount of oil from the Middle East. We have increased by 8 percent over the last year and there is no end in sight. We anticipate that that is going to go up periodically.

What is the problem? The problem obviously is that we have coal, which is dirty, which is high sulfur, which cannot be used in an environmentally sound way. You say, "Do not subsidize losers. We cannot continue to subsidize these various industries if they are losers. Let the free market system take care of it."

That would be fine, Mr. Chairman, if in fact we were never going to need this coal, if we were never going to have to rely on this coal to provide the very energy needs that are going to keep this country going. But, my colleagues, we are going to need this coal some day, and unless we can find a way to do it and use it and provide those energy needs in an environmentally sound way, we are going to be in very, very bad trouble when that day of reckoning comes.

So, Mr. Chairman, I would urge my colleagues to support the Regula amendment because it does give us an opportunity to develop clean coal technologies in an expeditious way, in the time that we have available to do it. As the gentleman from Minnesota pointed out, that time could come at any moment if OPEC decides to pull the plug on us. Let us do it and do it in as rapid a manner as possible so that we can develop a technology that will allow us to use this coal in an environmentally sound way so that we can utilize the supply of over 500 years of our energy needs in the ground.

Mr. Chairman, I urge support for the Regula substitute.

Mr. CONTE. Can the Chair give us a report on the time remaining on each side?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has 11 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] has 14⅔ minutes remaining.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP].

Mr. SHARP. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly support the Regula amendment. Between now and the year 2000, this country is going to build between 200 and 300 new powerplants to meet our electrical needs, perhaps more.

The question is: What fuel will go into those powerplants? Will it be domestic coal?

The other question is: What technology will be used if it is coal? Will it be old scrubbers, or will it be new technology which is more efficient for the ratepayer and more efficient for clean air?

There are new, emerging technologies to burn coal more cleanly. The gentleman from New Mexico brought those out. But the fact is, utilities are not going to adopt those in the new powerplants unless those technologies have been commercially demonstrated and have been proven to be reliable over time. Unless we accelerate the schedule on those technologies and their development, we are going to miss out when the investments are made in the new powerplants.

It is very important that we be for this now, not next year, not 4 years from now. This is the right vote if we are serious about clean air. This is the right vote if we are serious about coal. This is the right vote for our consumers.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to clarify a few of the misstatements concering the intent and the effect of my amendment and the amendment offered by my good friend, the gentleman from Ohio.

His substitute fails to cure the fundamental problem that I have and the administration has with this bill in regard to the clean coal provision. The provision calls for multiyear funding. That is one of our objections. The reduction of the outyear funding for the clean coal subsidy does not alter the fact that each dollar spent in those outyears would be beyond the House budget targets for the fossil fuel outlays.

My amendment supports the premise that is behind the synfuel rescission movement: That Congress should not rush to commit itself to massive subsidies of a multiyear basis for new technology demonstration projects. My amendment respects the House budget targets for the fossil fuels and respects the tried and the true process of appropriating moneys for 1 year at a time. The administration strongly supports my amendment and opposes the Regula amendment.

There was a lot of talk here about acid rain. There is nobody in this Congress who has worked harder to try to come out with a good acid rain bill, and it is amazing that outside of one person who spoke today, my good friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] the only one; all the others came from the dirty emission States, and all of them are against any legislation on acid rain. They are all from coal-producing States, and I tell my colleagues, if that coal lobby was really serious about the budget deficit, I think they are so powerful here tonight they could balance the budget in a week, before we go home for the August recess.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield briefly to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. RAHALL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is saying that all the other Members who have spoken are from the dirty pollution States; is that correct?

Mr. CONTE. Dirty emission States.

Mr. RAHALL. The dirty emission States. Does not the gentleman from Massachusetts have cars that run on his highways that perhaps pollute his air?

Mr. CONTE. We have our problem, and the bill that we have on acid rain, I hope the gentleman will cosponsor it, assesses emissions reductions in Massachusetts, as well as the other States, but we are being blocked by the State of Ohio and the other Midwestern States and certain members of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Wait a minute, now. We have $348 million in fossil fuels in this budget. SID YATES, he was very generous in this on R&D budget, $250 million of which is specifically for clean coal, and I am willing to give him another $100 million for this year. Keep their feet to the fire. Find out if they are doing a good job. We do not have this kind of money to burn, nearly a billion dollars.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has expired.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I would be glad to yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman's point is well taken about the cutbacks that we have had in research. As a matter of fact, in 1980, in our bill there was almost a billion dollars in research for clean coal technology. We have been cutting it back and cutting it back. We think the time has come to take a stand in favor of clean coal technology and that is why we support the Regula amendment.

Mr. CONTE. Well, I support the first-year funding, and stop funding the outyears of $200 million for 1987 and then $200 million for 1988.

I am not against research for clean coal. We both agree on that. But I am against this boondoggle of nearly a billion dollars when we do not have it. Where are you going to get it? I ask you: Where are you going to get it?

You go out front on the lawn out there and look at those trees. See what they produce. A lot of leaves. They are not producing dollar bills, and yet some of those who stood up here today are the ones who are saying we ought to have a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget. But when you gore their ox, when you try to save a few bucks, they all get up pleading.

I have been here 27 years. I have seen this like the handwriting on the wall. I am going down in defeat; there is no doubt about it. That lobby is too strong for me. But let me tell you, we are going to live to regret it, for one thing, Mr. YATES.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has again expired.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 2 more minutes.

Mr. Chairman, as ranking Republican on the Appropriations Committee, my good friend, the gentleman from Kentucky, BILL NATCHER knows I have worked hard down at that White House trying to get bills signed and I have tried to negotiate and compromise, but I cannot do it on this bill if you are going to leave this boondoggle in there. I cannot do it. I cannot be of any help to you.

Mr. YATES. If the gentleman will yield further, what is going to happen to all the money to put fish in the Connecticut River and put in the hatcheries and keep the ducks flying in New England? We have that money in this bill, too.

Mr. CONTE. We will keep those ducks flying. We will get another bill without this provision in there. We will take care of the ducks and fish.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN].

Mr. WALGREN. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to note that the gentleman from Massachusetts has been here 27 years and he has loved every minute of it. He will probably be here 27 more before all is said and done.

□ 1940

I want to speak in support of the Regula amendment and in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and to try to focus on a couple of misinterpretations that I consider rise almost to the level of hogwash. First, several have said that we have spent some $2 billion since 1981 on clean-coal development. Whatever we have spent $2 billion on, it was not the demonstration of clean coal technologies.

There have been several large-scale demonstration projects, liquefaction and the like, but clean-coal technology was not the focus of those projects.

Second, it was said that we are about to spend $250 million on clean coal research in the Department of Energy's fossil research budget for the coming year. The fact of the matter is that the Department of Energy is willing to spend absolutely zip, zero, on demonstration projects beyond the proof-of-concept stage. The testimony has been that it is their job in demonstration where the key to clear coal technology lies. The Department's own advisory study states that we would be abandoning clean coal technology if we follow the present policies of the Department of Energy. If I may quote the report of the Department's Energy Research Advisory Board, "The current policy of abandoning a development after proof of concept has been established will result in just that—abandonment. Clean use of coal is of major new-term and long-term national importance and deserves a change in this policy." So I do not see the substantial money spent in this area that has been talked about.

Third, it has been alleged that this program would not be subject to congressional review—that it would become sort of a "son of synfuels" program which foundered in many ways because of its power to commit large amounts of funds independent of congressional review. To say that their program would be beyond the reach of Congress is simply untrue. Any such program would be required to conform to the requirements of Public Law 93-577, The Federal nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Act. This law requires that any project involving over $50 million in Federal funds must be specifically authorized and that no commitment can be made exceeding $25 million without a report being filed with the appropriate committees of the Congress 60 days prior to such commitment. Moreover, the great advantage of moving funds from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to the DOE research budget is that the Congress would regain the ability of project by project oversight and the influence on a project by project basis that only the Congress can bring to bear.

Fourth, it has been said that this program exceeds the budget. The budget report specifically states that the category has room for a Clean Coal Technology Program of this size. Clearly the $6,000 million worth of energy programs provided for in the budget can make room for a $100 million a year program of their importance—especially when we are well on our way to rescinding previously appropriated expenditures in the Synfuels Program more than 10 times the size of this program.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, perhaps the most important reason to oppose the Conte-Broyhill amendment is because it will eliminate the outyear funding for the Clean Coal Program. Simply put, adoption of the Conte amendment will render the Clean Coal Program virtually meaningless.

The committee bill requires a significant contribution from the private sector, which goes beyond any requirements of any prior DOE projects. A full 50-percent private sector cost sharing is mandated in the committee bill, which would involve every phase of the proposed projects. We are requiring the private sector to take some real risk here. Contribution of equipment, data, and personnel is not considered as cost sharing. All projects would be multiyear projects. We cannot expect utilities and private industries to take the program seriously knowing the Federal Government may very well renege on its share of the partnership in future years.

I understand the reluctance of many Members to fund projects beyond 1 year. But I believe we have set up a unique partnership between the private sector and government in this program. This program is not a remake of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. There are no free handouts to private industry involved in the Clean Coal Program.

One of the major criticisms of past DOE research programs is that the Government would be involved in picking and choosing technologies. The strict cost-sharing requirements of the committee erase those concerns. According to the committee report, "projects in this program should be industry projects assisted by the Government, and not Government-directed demonstrations."

I think it is important to note that support for a fully-funded Clean Coal Program comes from environmentalists, utilities, labor unions and coal producers. When we have that broad a range of support for any particular issue, especially from parties who have traditionally opposed each other on important energy and environmental matters, that tells us something about the merits of the issue.

We need a demonstration program in this area because the introduction of new technologies into the marketplace is both expensive and risky, and does not happen in one fiscal year. Because the greatest market for these technologies—utilities—are regulated, they have limited ability to fund such programs on their own. While we must rely on the private sector to take the initiative and to share significantly in cost, there is a need, in light national concerns over acid rain emissions, for an appropriate Federal role and leadership.

There are few Members here today who cannot see the day when we will be back here debating acid rain legislation. Before we ask industry and electricity consumers to make that sacrifice, however, I feel that we have an obligation to do everything we can to commercialize new technologies which reduce both SOx and NOx emissions and promise to burn coal more efficiently. We know that these technologies work in the laboratory or on a small scale. But without a clean coal program, these technologies will never leave the laboratory, and utilities will be faced with the same difficult choice of switching to low sulfur coal or building costly scrubbers.

The clean coal technology reserve has been the subject of extensive hearings before the Committee on Science and Technology, the Committee on Energy and Commerce, and the Appropriations Committee. Witness after witness testified on the need for a multiyear Clean Coal Program. Now is the time to move ahead and fund the reserve and conduct an open and competitive solicitation.

Mr. Chairman, there are those who argue that we must choose between clean air and dirty coal. I do not believe we need to make that choice. Technologies are emerging that will enable coal to be used more cleanly and more economically, and we all have a stake in bringing these technologies to the marketplace.

I urge defeat of the Conte amendment and support for the clean coal technology reserve as reported by the Appropriations Committee.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALGREN] has expired.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. ERDREICH].

Mr. ERDREICH. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time, and I rise in support of the Regula amendment.

I do not know how we can get clean-coal technology unless indeed we have a multiyear approach to it. But with a 1-year approach and a funding of only 1 year, we will not get the sort of development we want to see. We have a resource in the ground that this Nation should start using, and the only approach that makes sense is a multiyear approach.

Mr. Chairman, I wish to associate my remarks with those of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] in strong support of his subsitute.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOUCHER].

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Regula substitute.

The provision of $500 million in moneys previously appropriated to the Synthetic Fuels Corporation for the clean coal technology reserve is a fiscally responsible effort to encourage the private sector to make investments in demonstration-scale clean-coal facilities.

The clean coal technology reserve is a significant nonregulatory approach to addressing the problems associated with acid rain. It should also be borne in mind that the commercialization of clean-coal technologies will both enhance America's energy independence and provide a much-needed stimulus to our distressed coal industry. The purpose of the clean coal technology reserve is to encourage private industry to make investments in commercial-scale demonstration facilities. Industry's commitment will be on a multiyear basis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BOUCHER] has expired.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman to yield me 30 additional seconds.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, my time is limited, so I yield the gentleman 10 additional seconds.

Mr. BOUCHER. Mr. Chairman, a 1-year commitment of $100 million will simply not be sufficient to encourage the commitment that will be required from industry to sustain this program and make it successful. I strongly urge support of the Regula substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] has 5 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] has 10½ minutes remaining.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA].

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that I do not come from a coal area. The only coal we have in Florida is what we have to burn. But I am very interested in clean coal, and in addition to being honored to chair the committee that deals with research and development, I chair that subcommittee.

We have been holding endless hours of hearings, and I can tell the Members that one of the real problems we have is the fact that we do not have modular demonstration plants that can demonstrate the technology that we are talking about.

A lot of my fiscally conservative friends have been asking, "Where do we get the money?" Well, we just rescinded $6 billion, and that is where we can get it, and it is not going to bust the budget. We have a $6 billion surplus, and this is just a little pittance, half a billion dollars over 3 years that we have just saved.

We need very desperately, I say to my colleagues, to move forward in this area. I have sat in endless hours of hearings listening to witness after witness. I think I know something about what I have to say, and I speak for the Regula amendment.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND].

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, I rise again in opposition to the amendment offered by my colleague from Massachusetts, Mr. CONTE.

I repeat, Mr. CONTE and I agree on a great number of issues, but the approach he wants to take, on funding the clear coal technology reserve is a matter on which we disagree. I believe that the elimination of the outyear funding for the reserve would so cripple the program as to guarantee its failure. And I further believe, that we are not in a position in this country, to be able to encourage additional delay, in developing the technologies by which coal can be burned more efficiently, and therefore, more cleanly.

Most studies predict that the demand for electric generating capacity will rise in the 1990's. Conservation is never going to be able to reduce that trend. We are quite simply going to have to build more powerplants. Let's consider how those facilities are going to be fueled. Forget about the nuclear option, it's not an option for the near-term. The nuclear power construction industry is moribund, and will not be able to play a significant role, in meeting the predicted increase in demand for electricity. That leaves utilities with two choices—they can fuel their new plants with coal, or they can fuel them with oil. What kind of a choice is oil? I would submit it's not a very good one. We import oil in this country, and we import much more than we should.

What's worse, our level of imports, which had been declining, is on the rise again. While oil price are somewhat lower than they have been, there's no guarantee that they will stay that way. And there has been talk in this city recently, that a tax on imported oil might be a helpful way of dealing with our budget deficit. To plan on using oil to fuel new electric powerplants in light of those circumstances, would seem to me, to be an exceedingly unwise, and even a dangerous process.

That leaves coal our most abundant energy resource. For those of us concerned about air pollution and particularly the manifestation of that pollution as acid rain and Mr. CONTE is certainly in that number the prospect of additional coal-burning powerplants is unsettling. Nevertheless, we recognize the realities which will dictate that new coal-fired powerplants come on line. I think it makes sense to use all possible efforts to make sure that coal is burned as cleanly and efficiently as possible.

The administration would like to study acid rain to death. Those of us whose areas suffer from acid rain believe that there has been sufficient study done to point to the need for some control programs. Burning coal more efficiently is one of the most obvious ways to reduce the emissions which many knowledgeable people believe, contribute to acid rain. The clean coal technology reserve will contribute to that end by encouraging the development of systems and technologies to burn coal more cleanly.

But the reserve will not produce those results if it is not given a fair chance. I agree with the proponents of this amendment; we do fund at other places in this bill clean coal demonstration projects. But that is not the purpose of the reserve. The projects to be funded by the reserve are intended to be, at the commercialization stage quickly, so that new coal-burning powerplants can come online on time, and with as negligible an impact on the environment as possible.

These projects will require substantial cost sharing by industry. As such, the reserve will represent a new approach to Federal funding of development in this area. The reserve will not represent a free ride for industry. It will represent a partnership opportunity in which only projects, with a clear commercial adaptation need apply. I cannot believe, Mr. Chairman, that we will attract the kind of high quality projects we so desperately need, if the Federal commitment appears uncertain. By striking the outyear funding, the amendment would produce precisely that result. We cede no review authority, by making a long-term commitment to the reserve through this bill. We do, however, demonstrate the kind of steadfastness of purpose necessary, to convince our potential partners in industry, that cost sharing on their part would be a sound use of resources. Without that conviction, this program, in my judgment, will fail.

Regions like New England need some relief from acid rain, and they need it now. We certainly do not need to have the existing situation made worse. New coal-burning powerplants, which do not have the best possible emissions reduction equipment, will make the situation worse. The reserve, offers a promise, that the development of the needed technologies and equipment, will coincide with the new plants coming online. As such, it represents a potentially significant component, to an acid rain control strategy. The work of the reserve needs to be encouraged, not discouraged, and the Conte amendment should therefore be defeated.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ECKART].

Mr. ECKART of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, for yielding to me.

One of the issues here is the ability of taking high technology, as my friend, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA] said, off the drawing board and hanging it on the utility plants and the steel plants and the smelters and mining facilities of this Nation. There is an old commercial on television that says, "You can pay me now or you can pay me later."

The bottom line is in the development of precombustion cleaning of coal; what we can do is vitiate the tremendous cost of cleaning that coal after it is burned and dealing with it before it is burned. It has been demonstrated to our committee that it costs one-third less to build and one-fifth less to operate coal-cleaning equipment than it does to go through the current scrubbing process.

Now, where do the dollars come from? We just repealed $6 billion of misguided spending in the Synthetic Fuels Corporation, and I think what we are doing clearly is just reprioritizing the necessities of Government. We have learned the lessons of the Synfuels Corporation. Why can we not learn the lesson of a Nation that is capable of putting a man on the Moon and use our technologies to figure out how to burn our coal cleanly, safely, and efficiently?

Four days worth of imported oil would pay for this program, and less than 20 hours of Pentagon spending would pay for this, a different form of national security and independence, the ability to use that which is indigenous to the United States and not to be depending upon foreign nations, not only to dictate foreign policy but our energy policy as well.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment, as advanced by my friend, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], makes eminent economic sense. It is good sense for the environment, and it is most important to those of us who really do want to do something about the environment and the economy in which that environment is found.

So, Mr. Chairman, it makes sense to support the Regula amendment. We need to, as one Member who preceded me said, make sure that what we do makes sense. This makes good sense. It makes good sense in dollars and cents environmentally.

SUPPORT THE REGULA AMENDMENT

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BOLAND] has expired.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MCCLOSKEY].

Mr. MCCLOSKEY Mr. Chairman, there has been a lot of talk tonight about busting the budget, but we must remember that this is not just a matter of money. All the money for next year and beyond would have been transferred from the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

I am very much in favor of the Regula amendment and against the Conte amendment. I think the clean-coal technology reserve is a program that gives hope to many of the depressed coal-producing areas of our Nation.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Regula amendment.

I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, "Say it isn't so, gentleman from Massachusetts, long-time leader in acid rain." It was only a few days ago that you were on the floor and you were going to embark us all on a multiyear program—10 years, 10 million tons of SO_2, billions of dollars of cost, ratepayers' costs go way up, and with no certainty as to what was going to be accomplished. That was a multiyear program.

We just need three-quarters of $1 million to embark us on this project. It is an acid-rain bill. The Regula amendment is an acid-rain bill, and I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], we want to keep those ducks flying through cleaner skies than we presently have.

□ 1950

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I just want to tell that young fellow, the gentleman from West Virginia, that when I was down in that well asking for acid-rain legislation, I did not have my hand out and did not have my hand in the public trough, like the gentleman has here tonight. My acid-rain bill would not have cost the taxpayers a single nickel.

I have been on the Appropriations Committee for 27 years. The State of West Virginia is going to sink for what their Senator has got and what my old friend, Mr. STAGGERS, has got.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds to point out that the Office of Technology Assessment estimates that the cost to the taxpayer of the acid-rain legislation would be $3 billion to $4 billion, not $500 million.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. MOLLOHAN].

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Regula amendment. There has been criticism that this program costs too much. Indeed, this program does not cost too much. It does not cost too much when you compare it with the acid rain legislation which has been introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Conservative estimates are that the total cost for implementation of that acid rain legislation would be $200 billion. That comes out of the taxpayers' pockets, whether it comes through the Government or not.

With regard to the criticism of the multiyear nature of the program, we do not have a clean-coal program if it is not multiyear. Investors just do not make decisions in that timeframe.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes and 30 seconds to the majority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WRIGHT].

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Chairman, I recently ran into a fellow who said, "JIM, I think I've got some problems with the energy situation."

He said, "I know we are running out of oil and I don't think you fellows ought to depend on oil anymore. Another thing, coal, they tell me that coal is dirty and you burn that coal and it causes acid rain. I really don't think we ought to be depending on coal."

He said, "I just can't believe that this nuclear power is clean and safe. I don't think we ought to go into that nuclear business."

I said, "Well, what do you think we ought to do?"

He said, "Well, why don't we just use electricity?"

Now, it seems to me that is kind of the attitude of those people who are not willing to do anything to develop any form of energy for the security and the future of the United States. We are going to need more electricity. In the 1990's we are going to need an additional generating capacity of some 100,000 to 200,000 megawatts beyond that which we have. How are we going to get that?

We are running out of oil, indeed. Surely nobody is foolish enough to think that the energy crisis is behind us. We are importing as much oil as we were at the height of that energy crisis just 6 short years ago when an Arab embargo brought our economy to its very knees and raised the price of everything we were producing and had long queues of American motorists lined up in the streets waiting for service. Our import level has not changed. The only way in which it has changed is that today we are importing not only crude oil; today we also are importing refined petroleum products.

Do you know what has happened to the industrial base of the United States as we have grown more and more dependent on foreign countries? In the last 3 years, 150 independent petroleum refineries in the United States have gone out of business. We are importing refined products.

We are not making headway very rapidly on nuclear power because every nuclear facility in this country has had long delays and cost overruns.

We have just about exhausted all the hydroelectric power sites. What do we have?

I will tell you what we have. We have coal. I do not come from a major coal producing area. I do not even come from a major coal-burning area. But I do come from the greatest coal country in the whole world. The United States has about one-third of the world's known coal reserves. We could be the Middle East of the world in coal. We would not have to depend upon the Middle East. We would not have to depend upon any foreign country if we were simply to develop the means of our own greatest resource, if we were willing and able to stick with a program long enough so that we could act from strength. And coal is our answer. Clean coal, not dirty coal.

Surely it makes sense to continue this modest program that will enable us to burn and use effectively, cleanly, and safely more and more of that product which is in the greatest abundance in our own country. That is an American deal. All of the requirements of national security, all of the claims of the domestic economy, all of the considerations of a clean environment call out for this modest action. We ought to be doing many times more.

If you look up at the wall behind the Speaker's dais, you will see a famous quotation from Daniel Webster. All those generations ago, he called upon us to develop the potential of America. "Let us develop the resources of our land, call forth its powers, build up its institutions, promote all its great interests and see whether we also in our day and generation may not perform something worthy to be remembered."

Here is our chance. Last week, we virtually voted to do away with the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. I think that was a mistake, but it is done.

In that sense, I guess I may know how Disraeli felt when he pleaded with the House of Commons to build the Suez Canal and they voted him down. He said, "Gentleman, I appeal to history."

I am not arguing that case now. I am simply saying that if we have let private industry invest $2 billion in the Great Plains plant in North Dakota and then wiped it out, if we have spent all this time trying to develop a synthetic fuels capability and let it go down the tube, for goodness sakes, let us save one thing. Let us save our clean-coal technology.

Let us move ahead on at least one energy front. Let us develop the resources of our land. Let us give the answer to the world that, no, you cannot just sit back and wait for the United States to destroy itself, because we are not a self-destructive people.

We may be a forgetful people. We may be a people who have a small capacity to sustain a sense of urgency, but at least we are not so totally negligent that we will abandon altogether our determination to be energy sufficient, to build upon our own strength, for jobs in our economy, for an American industry fueled by American fuel and for a clean environment in which future generations of Americans can live.

So I ask your vote for the amendment by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA].

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Conte amendment and in support of the clean coal technology reserve. It is with great regret that I oppose Representative CONTE, for whom I have the greatest respect; but in this case his amendment does not represent good public policy.

Along with Mr. CONTE, I have expressed reservations about parts of the Synfuels program. However, problems with synfuels should not mean that we have to gut the clean coal technology reserve, which is an important part of our drive for energy independence. While not affecting the $100 million dedicated to the clean coal reserve this year, the Conte amendment would eliminate the $300 million in the bill for fiscal year 1987 and the $350 million for fiscal year 1988. Let me enumerate the reasons why this is a mistake and why the reserve is so vital:

First, the clean coal technology reserve promotes low-cost electricity development from an abundant, indigenous natural resource. Most of my colleagues are probably aware that coal currently provides over half of the Nation's electricity and a sixth of our industrial energy consumption. In my State of Pennsylvania coal was responsible for 78 percent of electric utility consumption and 39 percent of total energy consumption in 1981. Furthermore, our country's demonstrated reserve base contains nearly 500 billion tons of coal, enough for hundreds of years of consumption.

Second, it is fiscally prudent. The stringent cost-sharing provisions applicable to the clean coal technology reserve require that the private sector provide at least a 50-percent cost-share for reserve projects. In addition, no new funds utilized for the reserve. Rather, the $750 million for the outyears is transferred from previously appropriated but unobligated funds remaining in the Synthetic Fuels Corporation's budget for the reserve.

Next, it brings security to long-term industrial decisions regarding energy investment. Demonstrating new technologies is both expensive and risky. Since we are requiring that industry fund 50 percent of every reserve project, we cannot expect private utilities and industries to take the program seriously if they feel that the Federal Government may renege on its share of the partnership in later years.

The program is also environmentally sound. The reserve will fund demonstrations of advanced technologies which reduce both SOx and NOx emissions and promise to burn coal more efficiently. If we are to consider legislation requiring emission reductions by industries and utilities to address rain, we should begin now to advance technologies which will achieve such reductions.

Finally, this promotes energy independence. As our most abundant domestic energy resource, increased use of coal will revitalize the coal industry and put our unemployed miners back to work.

Mr. Chairman, the clean coal technology reserve is supported by the Environmental Policy Institute, the United Mine Workers of America, the Edison Electric Institute, and the National Coal Association. I urge my colleagues to join environmentalists, labor unions and industry in support of the reserve and to oppose the Conte amendment.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, the parliamentary situation now is that we will be voting on the substitute amendment for the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts, is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The first vote will come on the Regula substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I urge a vote for this substitute. It is a responsible way to address the need to have clean coal to make America safe, to make America independent, to make America secure in the years ahead.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] as a substitute for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

The amendment offered as a substitute for the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], as amended.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask what happens if the substitute amendment, as amended, is voted down?

□ 2000

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph remains unamended and we will return to the original bill.

Mr. YATES. With the provision for $750 million.

The CHAIRMAN. The original bill, that is correct.

Mr. YATES. I thank the Chair.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. REGULA. If I understand it correctly, a vote no would return us to $750 million; a vote aye will leave it at $500 million for clean coal technology. Is that correct?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the gentleman's request is not a proper parliamentary inquiry. It is whatever is in the original bill that we will, of course, return to if the amendment is not adopted.

Members will record their votes by electronic device.

The votes was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 238, noes 184, not voting 11, as follows:

Mr. GEKAS, Mrs. LLOYD, and Messrs. EARLY, COOPER, SCHAEFER, DUNCAN, ROYBAL, WHITTAKER, BILIRAKIS, TRAXLER, ACKERMAN, TORRICELLI, GRAY of Illinois, BROWN of Colorado, STRANG, RINALDO, DINGELL, WOLPE, RICHARDSON, KOSTMAYER, BOEHLERT, GILMAN, GONZALEZ, ANDERSON, CONYERS, and LOWRY of Washington changed their votes from "aye" to "no."

Messrs. SPRATT, BROWN of Colorado, and PANETTA, Mrs. KENNELLY, and Messrs. BREAUX, GROTBERG, KASICH, EDWARDS of California, and O'BRIEN changed their votes from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Within ninety days following enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Energy pursuant to the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Act of 1974, as amended (42 U.S.C. 5901, et seq.), shall issue a general request for proposals for clean coal technology projects described in this account, and immediately begin the contract process for providing financial assistance to such projects.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of this bill and particularly the provision that retains the congressional prohibition on leasing for oil and gas in four areas of critical economic and ecological importance off the Massachusetts coast. I shall not take the House's time to further detail the importance of the fertile Georges Bank Fishing Ground to New England and to the Nation.

That is well known

While I deeply appreciate the efforts of the Appropriations Committee to preserve the sanctity of this resource, I am hopeful that we in New England can reach a long-term agreement with the Interior Department—similar to the accord recently reached with the California delegation—that would obviate the need for Congress to continue to impose a specific statutory prohibition on leasing in these areas.

Last April, I wrote to Secretary of the Interior Donald Hodel asking for an assurance that the tracts subject to the congressional ban off the New England coast would not be subject to future leasing. The Secretary replied that it would be "impossible" to provide me with such an assurance. In light of the Department's ability to reach an agreement with the California delegation, I wrote again to the Secretary last week, stating my belief that an agreement might also be reached on the Massachusetts tracts. I am hopeful that such an agreement can be reached before final congressional action on the Interior appropriations bill for 1986. Pending that outcome, however, the continued inclusion of the moratorium language in this bill remains crucial.

I want to express by gratitude and that of all New Englanders to Chairman YATES, and to my Massachusetts colleagues SILVIO CONTE, EDWARD BOLAND, and JOE EARLY for their leadership in protecting our coast.

Mrs. BOGGS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to express my appreciation to the gentleman from Illinois and the other members of the subcommittee for the fine job they have done this year as custodians of our parks and natural resources, our energy efforts and our cultural programs.

However, I must express my disappointment with the agreement that has been reached between the Secretary of Interior and some members of the California delegation on the issue of oil and gas leasing off the coast of California. In the name of compromise, I fear they have severely undermined the future energy security of this Nation in a manner that may expose our people and our economy to the same type of manipulation of energy prices we experienced in 1973 and 1979.

Our resolve to protect our environment is unequivocal but we must also be unequivocal in our commitment to our national security and to a sound economy. We must view offshore oil and gas development as a major component of an integrated national energy supply system, not as an isolated, regional issue.

We must bear in mind that our petroleum situation is more precarious than falling oil prices indicate. Our level of consumption will gradually increase over the next decade and a half and, at the same time, domestic production of oil and gas will remain steady, at best. Thus, even in the most optimistic situation, we will continue to rely heavily on the imported petroleum products for which we paid $52 billion to foreign suppliers in 1983. This represents a sizable portion of our staggering foreign trade deficit. If current trends continue, we will continue to consume as much or more imported oil, thus contributing even more to our trade deficit.

The Energy Department projects that the United States can continue to produce about 8 million barrels per day through the end of this century. This is slightly below current domestic production levels. To produce at this rate through the year 2000 we must discover and produce 2.9 billion barrels of petroleum each year. We cannot rely on proven, recoverable reserves if we are to maintain our current level of domestic production.

Unfortunately, low oil prices and a buyers market have led to general complacency about energy supplies. These soft market conditions will not last forever and when the market changes the economic consequences may be quite severe. Inflation during the past 4 years was not whipped as much by skilled economic strategies, as by greedy petroleum-producing countries seeking hard currency in a worldwide recession by increasing oil production, thereby depressing world energy prices.

Unfortunately, our national energy policy continues to respond only to crises. Because of a false sense of security resulting from soft oil prices, the administration has reduced emphasis on energy conservation and phased down oil purchases for the strategic petroleum reserve, and we have altered the future of synthetic fuels research. These actions underline the need to accelerate exploration in the OCS and onshore as a cushion in the event of an oil supply disruption.

Ironically, the offshore drilling program in the frontier regions have not proven to be successful. Interest has dropped in the Atlantic region, the Gulf of Alaska and lower Cook Inlet after a number of dry holes and the Beaufort Sea and Bering Sea exploration have not been very promising. Because these areas have not lived up to their promise, it now appears the OCS will not contribute as substantially to the Nation's future energy supplies as was once thought.

Last March the Minerals Management Service reassessed offshore oil and gas potential based on exploration since 1981. As a result, OCS oil potential was reduced 55 percent and natural gas 44 percent. Most of these reductions were in areas once considered to be the prime locations for large discoveries.

Those who believe we can rely on the proven reserves in the Gulf and Alaska are wrong. Those who believe there are mega-reserves out there just waiting to be discovered are misinformed. We must begin the long exploration and development process now—today—if we are to locate and produce the reserves we will need in 10 years. We cannot afford to put any one area of the country off-limits for another decade or more.

I hope our friends in the Interior Department and from California will face reality and accept a balanced, environmentally sound development program.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. BOGGS. I yield to the gentleman from Montana.

Mr. MARLENEE. I heartily endorse what the gentlewoman, my colleague, has to say, and want to associate myself with her remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

FOSSIL ENERGY RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

(INCLUDING TRANSFER OF FUNDS)

For necessary expenses in carrying out fossil energy research and development activities, under the authority of the Department of Energy Organization Act (Public Law 95-91), including the acquisition of interest, including defeasible and equitable interests in any real property or any facility or for plant or facility acquisition or expansion, $299,534,000, to remain available until expended, of which $535,000 is for the functions of the Office of the Federal Inspector for the Alaska Natural Gas Transportation System established pursuant to the authority of Public Law 94-586 (90 Stat. 2908-2909), and $12,760,000 to be derived by transfer from unobligated balances in the "Fossil energy construction" account, $2,137,000 to be derived by transfer from the account entitled "Alternative fuels production", and $2,775,000 to be derived by transfer from amounts derived from fees for guarantees of obligations collected pursuant to section 19 of the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Act of 1974, as amended (42 U.S.C. 5919), and deposited in the "Energy security reserve" established by Public Law 96-126: Provided, That no part of the sum herein made available shall be used for the field testing of nuclear explosives in the recovery of oil and gas: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, funds appropriated under this head in Public Law 97-394 for a Western Hemisphere alternative fuels facility feasibility study, which remain unobligated, shall be available for carrying out any fossil energy research and development activities.

NAVAL PETROLEUM AND OIL SHALE RESERVES

For necessary expenses in carrying out naval petroleum and oil shale reserves activities, including the purchase of not to exceed 3 passenger motor vehicles, for replacement only, $13,668,000, to remain available until expended.

ENERGY CONSERVATION

For necessary expenses in carrying out energy conservation activities, $468,326,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That pursuant to section 111(b)(1)(B) of the Energy Reorganization Act of 1974, as amended, 42 U.S.C. 5821(b)(1)(B), of the amount appropriated under this head, $10,319,000 shall be available for a grant for basic industry research facilities located at Northwestern University without section 111(b)(2) of such Act being applicable: Provided further, That section 404 of Public Law 98-558 shall not be effective in any fiscal year in which the amount made available for low income weatherization assistance from appropriations under this head is less than 5 per centum above the amount made available in fiscal year 1985.

ECONOMIC REGULATION

For necessary expenses in carrying out the activities of the Economic Regulatory Administration and the Office of Hearings and Appeals, $24,623,000.

EMERGENCY PREPAREDNESS

For necessary expenses in carrying out emergency preparedness activities, $3,989,000.

STRATEGIC PETROLEUM RESERVE

For expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 151 through 166 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act of 1975 (Public Law 94-163), $199,017,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That none of the funds appropriated under this head in this and other appropriation Acts may be used for test sales of oil from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve: Provided further, That in compliance with section 160(d)(1) of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (Public Law 94-163), as amended, the minimum required rate of fill during fiscal year 1986 is 100,000 barrels a day until the Strategic Petroleum Reserve is 500,000,000 barrels and 50,000 barrels a day thereafter.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the first proviso of the first paragraph on page 50, lines 5 through 8, is legislation in a general appropriations bill in violation of rule XXI, clause 2.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, we concede the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois concedes the point of order, and the proviso objected to is stricken from the bill.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ENERGY INFORMATION ADMINISTRATION

For necessary expenses in carrying out the activities of the Energy Information Administration, $60,782,000.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS, DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Appropriations under this Act for the current fiscal year shall be available for hire of passenger motor vehicles; hire, maintenance, and operation of aircraft; purchase, repair, and cleaning of uniforms; and reimbursement to the General Services Administration for security guard services.

From appropriations under this Act, transfers of sums may be made to other agencies of the Government for the performance of work for which the appropriation is made.

None of the funds made available to the Department of Energy under this Act shall be used to implement or finance authorized price support or loan guarantee programs unless specific provision is made for such programs in an appropriations Act.

The Secretary is authorized to accept lands, buildings, equipment, and other contributions from public and private sources and to prosecute projects in cooperation with other agencies, Federal, State, private, or foreign: Provided, That revenues and other moneys received by or for the account of the Department of Energy or otherwise generated by sale of products in connection with projects of the Department appropriated under this Act may be retained by the Secretary of Energy, to be available until expended, and used only for plant construction, operation, costs, and payments to cost-sharing entities as provided in appropriate cost-sharing contracts or agreements: Provided further, That the remainder of revenues after the making of such payments shall be covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: Provided further, That any contract, agreement or provision thereof entered into by the Secretary pursuant to this authority shall not be executed prior to the expiration of 30 calendar days (not including any day in which either House of Congress is not in session because of adjournment of more than three calendar days to a day certain) from the receipt by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate of a full and comprehensive report on such project, including the facts and circumstances relied upon in support of the proposed project.

The Secretary of Energy may transfer to the Emergency Preparedness appropriation such funds as are necessary to meet any unforeseen emergency needs from any funds available to the Department of Energy from this Act.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

HEALTH RESOURCES AND SERVICES ADMINISTRATION

INDIAN HEALTH SERVICES

For expenses necessary to carry out the Act of August 5, 1954 (68 Stat. 674), the Indian Self-Determination Act, the Indian Health Care Improvement Act, and titles III and V and section 338G of the Public Health Service Act with respect to the Indian Health Service, including hire of passenger motor vehicles and aircraft; purchase of reprints; purchase and erection of portable buildings; payments for telephone service in private residences in the field, when authorized under regulations approved by the Secretary, $836,483,000: Provided, That funds made available to tribes and tribal organizations through grants and contracts authorized by the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975 (88 Stat. 2203; 25 U.S.C. 450), shall remain available until September 30, 1987. Funds provided in this Act may be used for one-year contracts and grants which are to be performed in two fiscal years, so long as the total obligation is recorded in the year for which the funds are appropriated: Provided further, That the amounts collected by the Secretary of Health and Human Services under the authority of title IV of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act shall be available until September 30, 1987, for the purpose of achieving compliance with the applicable conditions and requirements of titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act (exclusive of planning, design, construction of new facilities, or major renovation of existing Indian Health Service facilities): Provided further, That funding contained herein, and in any earlier appropriation Acts, for scholarship programs under section 103 of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act and section 338G of the Public Health Service Act with respect to the Indian Health Service shall remain available for expenditure until September 30, 1987.

INDIAN HEALTH FACILITIES

For construction, major repair, improvement, and equipment of health and related auxiliary facilities, including quarters for personnel; preparation of plans, specifications, and drawings; acquisition of sites, purchase and erection of portable buildings, purchases of trailers and for provision of domestic and community sanitation facilities for Indians, as authorized by section 7 of the Act of August 5, 1954 (42 U.S.C. 2004a), the Indian Self-Determination Act and the Indian Health Care Improvement Act, $61,483,000, to remain available until expended.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE

Appropriations in this Act to the Indian Health Service, available for salaries and expenses, shall be available for services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109 but at rates not to exceed the per diem equivalent to the rate for GS-18, and for uniforms or allowances therefor as authorized by law (5 U.S.C. 5901-5902), and for expenses of attendance at meetings which are concerned with the functions or activities for which the appropriation is made or which will contribute to improved conduct, supervision, or management of those functions or activities: Provided, That none of the funds appropriated under this Act to the Indian Health Service shall be available for the initial lease of permanent structures without advance provision therefor in appropriation Acts: Provided further, That non-Indian patients may be extended health care at all Indian Health Service facilities, if such care can be extended without impairing the ability of the Indian Health Service to fulfill its responsibility to provide health care to Indians served by such facilities and subject to such reasonable charges as the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall prescribe, the proceeds of which shall be deposited in the fund established by sections 401 and 402 of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act: Provided further, That funds appropriated to the Indian Health Service in this Act, except those used for administrative and program direction purposes, shall not be subject to limitations directed at curtailing Federal travel and transportation: Provided further, That with the exception of service units which currently have a billing policy, the Indian Health Service shall not initiate any further action to bill Indians in order to collect from third-party payers nor to charge those Indians who may have the economic means to pay unless and until such time as Congress has agreed upon a specific policy to do so and has directed the Indian Health Service to implement such a policy: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law, to satisfy the outstanding judgment against the Seattle Indian Health Board resulting from termination of its occupancy of the Kobe Park building in Seattle, Washington, $270,000 plus interest shall be provided from the unobligated balance available to the Indian Health Service from prior years' appropriations.

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

OFFICE OF ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY EDUCATION

INDIAN EDUCATION

For necessary expenses to carry out, to the extent not otherwise provided, the Indian Education Act, $67,656,000, of which $50,323,000 shall be for part A and $15,000,000 shall be for parts B and C.

OTHER RELATED AGENCIES

NAVAJO AND HOPI INDIAN RELOCATION COMMISSION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For necessary expenses of the Navajo and Hopi Indian Relocation Commission as authorized by Public Law 93-531, $20,442,000, to remain available until expended, for operating expenses of the Commission.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For necessary expenses of the Smithsonian Institution, including research in the fields of art, science, and history; development, preservation, and documentation of the National Collections; presentation of public exhibits and performances; collection, preparation, dissemination, and exchange of information and publications; conduct of education, training, and museum assistance programs; maintenance, alteration, operation, lease (for terms not to exceed ten years), and protection of buildings, facilities, and approaches; not to exceed $100,000 for services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109; up to 5 replacement passenger vehicles; purchase, rental, repair, and cleaning of uniforms for employees; $182,599,000 including not less than $793,000 to carry out the provisions of the National Museum Act, $350,000 to be made available to the trustees of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts for payment to the National Symphony Orchestra and $350,000 for payment to the Washington Opera Society for activities related to their responsibilities as resident entities of the Center: Provided, That funds appropriated herein are available for advance payments to independent contractors performing research services or participating in official Smithsonian presentations: Provided further, That none of these funds shall be available to a Smithsonian Research Foundation.

MUSEUM PROGRAMS AND RELATED RESEARCH

(SPECIAL FOREIGN CURRENCY PROGRAM)

For payments in foreign currencies which the Treasury Department shall determine to be excess to the normal requirements of the United States, for necessary expenses for carrying out museum programs, scientific and cultural research, and related educational activities, as authorized by law, $2,500,000, to remain available until expended and to be available only to United States institutions: Provided, That this appropriation shall be available, in addition to other appropriations to the Smithsonian Institution, for payments in the foregoing currencies: Provided further, That none of these funds shall be available to a Smithsonian Research Foundation: Provided further, That not to exceed $500,000 may be used to make grant awards to employees of the Smithsonian Institution.

CONSTRUCTION AND IMPROVEMENTS, NATIONAL ZOOLOGICAL PARK

For necessary expenses of planning, construction, remodeling, and equipping of buildings and facilities at the National Zoological Park, by contract or otherwise, $4,851,000, to remain available until expended.

RESTORATION AND RENOVATION OF BUILDINGS

For necessary expenses of restoration and renovation of buildings owned or occupied by the Smithsonian Institution, by contract or otherwise, as authorized by section 2 of the Act of August 22, 1949 (63 Stat. 623), including not to exceed $10,000 for services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109, $13,575,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That contracts awarded for environmental systems, protection systems, and exterior repair or renovation of buildings of the Smithsonian Institution may be negotiated with selected contractors and awarded on the basis of contractor qualifications as well as price.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order with regard to that part of the bill, that paragraph as to restoration and renovation of buildings.

The provision is in violation of clause 2, rule XXI, in that it is attempting to legislate on a general appropriations bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. YATES. I do, Mr. Chairman.

We resist the point of order. It is a question of interpretation of the word "alteration."

The authorizing language is as follows:

Appropriations are authorized for the maintenance of the astrophysical observatory and the making of solar observations at high altitudes for repairs and alterations of buildings and grounds occupied by the Smithsonian Institution in the District of Columbia and elsewhere and for the preparation of manuscripts, et cetera.

Mr. Chairman, the alteration in question is within the center of the building. It is under the courtyard of the Freer Gallery, and it requires that the structure of the building be altered by digging down beneath the garden of the center of the building. It is an alteration of an existing structure and, therefore, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the point of order should be overruled.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] desire to be heard further on his point of order?

Mr. SHAW. Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois is quite right in citing that particular provision which he has relied upon for the authorization of the appropriation. However, the provision that I am concerned with commences at line 19, which reads: "* * * to remain available until expended: Provided that contracts awarded for environmental systems, protection systems, and exterior repair or renovation of buildings of the Smithsonian Institution may be negotiated with selected contractors and awarded on the basis of contractor qualifications as well as price."

That particular provision is clearly legislation in nature, and it is not contemplated by the authorization that the gentleman from Illinois cited and, therefore, that provision would knock out the entire paragraph that I have cited to the House.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is quite correct. I misconstrued the gentleman's point of order. His point of order to the phrase "to remain available until expended" is legislation, and we concede that point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] concedes the point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order. That language of the paragraph will be stricken from the bill.

Mr. SHAW. I am sorry, I could not hear the Chair. Did the Chair strike the whole paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair struck the whole paragraph.

Mr. SHAW. I thank the Chair.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. YATES

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. YATES: On page 58, line 13, insert the following:

RESTORATION AND RENOVATION OF BUILDINGS

For necessary expenses of restoration and renovation of buildings owned or occupied by the Smithsonian Institution, by contract or otherwise, as authorized by section 2 of the Act of August 22, 1949 (63 Stat. 623), including not to exceed $10,000 for services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109, $11,075,000 to remain available until expended: Provided, That contracts awarded for environmental systems, protection systems, and exterior repair or renovation of buildings of the Smithsonian Institution may be negotiated with selected contractors and awarded on the basis of contractor qualifications as well as price.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct an error that was made. The figure "$11,075,000" should be "$13,575,000."

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Florida reserve a point of order?

Mr. SHAW. Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Florida reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. SHAW. We do not have a copy of the amendment over here. However, as I heard it read by the Clerk, the provision "to remain available until expended" is still in there.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, if that is in there, I ask unanimous consent that that phrase be stricken.

The CHAIRMAN. It is the understanding of the Chair that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] is asking unanimous consent to correct the figure in his amendment.

Does the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] object to that?

Mr. SHAW. Yes, I do object, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is heard.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] is recognized in support of his amendment. A point of order on the amendment is reserved by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

What is the state of the amendment as read by the Clerk? Is the phrase "to remain available until expended" still in the amendment, or has that been striken?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair's understanding is that the pending amendment is the amendment as read, there being an objection to a unanimous-consent request to correct the figure in the amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. YATES

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. YATES: On page 58, line 13, insert the following:

RESTORATION AND RENOVATION OF BUILDINGS

For necessary expenses of restoration and renovation of buildings owned or occupied by the Smithsonian Institution, by contract or otherwise, as authorized by section 2 of the Act of August 22, 1949 (63 Stat. 623), including not to exceed $10,000 for services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109, $13,575,000.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, this restores the paragraph for the Smithsonian Institution as it was as voted out by committee. It provides the funds that are necessary for the restoration and renovation of the buildings of the Smithsonian, and I ask that the amendment be approved.

● Mrs. COLLINS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the proposed funding for the arts and humanities as suggested by my honorable colleague and fellow Chicagoan, SID YATES, who chairs the House Interior Appropriations Subcommittee, which has suggested increases over the much lower amounts announced by the administration.

As chairwoman of the House Government Activities and Transportation Subcommittee, I have spent the past 2 years doing extensive oversight work on the various agencies that would be affected by this bill: The National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities, the Institute of Museum Services and the Smithsonian, in particular.

One of these agencies, the IMS, has been singled out by the administration for exclusion repeatedly during the past 4 years—in spite of the excellent grants for operating support that it provides to museums and cultural institutions in each of the 50 States. Without these small incentive grants, many museums would either have to charge higher admission fees or close their doors.

This is the 20th anniversary year of the National Endowments, which have enriched this country beyond measure. Both these organizations serve as a catalyst to increase financial support from private citizens, public and private organizations, and State and local governments.

NEA describes its task to:

Foster artistic excellence by helping to develop the nation's finest creative talent, to preserve our cultural heritage in all its diversity, to make the arts available to wider, more informed audiences, and to promote the overall financial stability of American arts organizations.

In a similar vein, the NEH sees its mandate as encouraging high quality research and teaching, media programs for the general public and critical commentaries and scholarship in literature, history, philosophy, languages, the social sciences and archeology, to name but a few. Such a partnership between the NEH and the public "would lead to a better comprehension of man in relation to his environment," noted the Senate in its report with the enabling legislation.

Yes, we are in a period of the deficit spending but it is time to stop making up the difference by continually hacking away at the arts and humanities budgets.

Contrast the cost of one MX missile for $70 million with the request of $23 million for the IMS. Or think of the IMS budget, as one-tenth of the cost of one B-1 bomber.

Contrast the Music Program at NEA, with a budget of $15 million for fiscal year 1984 versus the $102 million requested by the administration for military bands. And now the President wants to further whittle the NEA Music Program to $9.7 million.

Let us definitely balance the budget, but with a more realistic view of the priorities and the common good for all our citizens. In view of the spiraling military expenditures, let us remember that the best defense of a democracy is a well educated, informed citizenry that is aware of the culture, history, and various resources of this country. These arts and humanities agencies do not deserve to be underfunded when vast abuses of waste and fraud go uncorrected throughout our military procurement system.

In 1969, the Congress was experiencing similar "severe budget stringency," but President Nixon recommended doubling the appropriation for the arts and humanities. He proclaimed that:

Too many American have been too long denied the inspiration and uplift of our cultural heritage. Now is the time to enrich the life of the mind and to evoke the splendid qualities of the American spirit.

That message remains equally true 15 years later and I urge you to support its directive. Thank you.●

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SHAW TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. YATES

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SHAW to the amendment offered by Mr. YATES: Strike "$13,575,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$11,075,000".

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, the amendment I am offering would decrease the amount authorized to the Smithsonian Institution for the restoration and renovation of buildings by $2.5 million.

Among the items for which the Smithsonian has requested funding in fiscal year 1986 is for $2.5 million for the construction of additional storage space beneath the Freer Gallery, located on the Mall; the building, I might add, was donated to the Smithsonian and not constructed at Government expense.

The Smithsonian's intention is to construct approximately 8,000 square feet of storage space at a total estimated cost of $5.5 million; the balance of the funding is to be revested in fiscal year 1987.

Mr. Chairman, the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds reviewed the Smithsonian's proposal in great detail earlier this year and based on that review, I can say without hesitation, that this proposal is unjustifiable and a blatant waste of taxpayers' money.

Basically, what the Smithsonian would like to do is construct an 8,000-square-foot basement under an existing building at a cost of more than $680 per square foot.

We are being asked to appropriate, here and now, funds for a costly, time-consuming, labor-intensive excavation of dirt beneath the existing building; incremental underpinning of the structure to insure it does not collapse as the work is going along; and the construction of a new structural shell or basement level.

Work of this nature is fraught with construction uncertainties which translated means a larger contingency fund, and possibly additional funds, to pay for unexpected problems.

By comparison, for the $5.5 million being requested to construct this 8,000 square feet for storage space, in excess of 100,000 square feet of storage space, and could be constructed elsewhere in the city above ground.

I would like to point out that this amendment will not affect the funds requested for the construction of the link structure which will connect the Freer and Sackler Galleries or the funds requested for the renovation of the basement areas which currently exist.

Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, to appropriate funds for the construction of a $680 per square foot basement cannot be justified by this Congress and I would urge to adopt the amendment.

□ 2040

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHAW. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SUNDQUIST. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Subcommittee on Public Buildings and Grounds, I concur and rise in support of the gentleman's amendment. I think unless we do this, it is going to be a blatant waste of taxpayers' money.

The Smithsonian wants to construct an 8,000-square-foot basement under an existing building. And as the gentleman has described, at a cost of $680 per square foot. For the same amount of money, we could build, as he said, a storage facility of 100,000 square feet. We are talking about $5 million for the project. If those in this body want to go home and say that we supported the construction of a $5 million, 8,000-square-foot storage area, I think that our taxpayers and our constituents are going to be very unhappy.

As the gentleman from Florida has emphasized. His amendment will not affect the funds requested for the construction of the link structure which will connect the Freer and Sackler Galleries.

It is incredible to me that the Smithsonian would ask for this amount and that this body would consider spending that much money for that square footage. I urge your support for the amendment offered by my colleague from Florida.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say in closing that this is in no way an attack upon the Smithsonian, the present management, the past management, or what they are doing. They are doing a splendid job. They are doing a service for the entire country and I support them in just about everything they do. But there are limits to our generosity here in Washington, and this is absolutely an absurd request, and I urge the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in reluctant opposition to the amendment offered by our very fine colleague from Florida.

I am speaking on this issue not only as a Member of this body, but also as one of the three Representatives of the House of Representatives on the Smithsonian Board of Regents. Moreover, not only am I a Regent of the Smithsonian, I also chair the Freer Art Gallery Visiting Committee.

I oppose this amendment because the work to be done with the funds at issue is needed. The funds and the construction project here is timely, and it is appropriate. As many of you know, we are constructing a quadrangle project. The total cost is $75 million, of which half of that amount is coming from the private sector, already raised, and the other half from the public sector. As part of the ongoing Quadrangle project, about one-third of the Freer's courtyard will be excavated and facilities will be constructed which will link the Freer Gallery with the new Sackler Gallery being constructed as part of the Quadrangle project.

At issue here, however, is the question of what to do with the portion of the courtyard not being used for the Quadrangle link. The Smithsonian believes that as long as a portion of the courtyard is being converted to usable space, it only makes sense to complete the job and complete the entire courtyard.

Let me emphasize that this is not the construction of a new building, but merely the alteration of an existing structure. If we do not do the work at this time, we will lose forever the chance to make maximum use of this space, and we do need the space.

The Freer Building now houses more than 26,000 valuable art objects. This building has served the people of Washington and the Nation for more than 60 years. With this modest expenditure, it will continue to be of service for generations to come. This work will increase the storage space by some 43 percent, and provide additional exhibit and office space as well.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, I believe this work falls completely within the permanent authorization that is contained in chapter 20 of the United States Code, which allows "repairs and alterations of buildings and grounds occupied by the Smithsonian Institution."

Surely converting an interior courtyard into basement storage space is unambiguously an alteration. And therefore, Mr. Chairman, I urge the defeat of this amendment.

In closing, let me add my congratulations to the Appropriations Committee, and especially to Chairman YATES for his usual thoughtful and finely crafted legislative package.

Let me also add this whole issue about how expensive is this quadrangle project on the basis of this $180 or on the basis of my figure, which is $180 a square foot, rather than the $680 being quoted by the proponents of this amendment.

What we are talking about here is the construction of space to an existing structure, and that is not a building of 13,000 square feet, but it is really the efficient use of the 45,000 square feet in the Freer Art Gallery. So to me, the amount of construction cost here, the $2.5 million, ought not to be just allocated to the 13,000 square feet of space, but the 45,000 square feet of space that is going to be available under the total construction project as part of the Quadrangle project.

So it is my hope that the Members will allow the $2.5 millon to be kept in this appropriations bill so that we might be able to make that connection between the Quadrangle project and the Freer Art Gallery.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] has expired.

(On request of Mr. SHAW and by unanimous consent, Mr. MINETA was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW].

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to the gentleman as well as to the committee seated here tonight that what we are talking about is $2.5 million for the first year, with a total estimated cost of $5 million, so we are talking about more than that. I am not talking about the connecting corridors, I am talking about just 8,000 square feet of storage space which does work out to $680 per square foot. We are talking about over $5 million.

Mr. MINETA. The gentleman is correct. The total amount for construction is $5 million, but that is my point. It is not just for construction, it is also for renovation of the existing space.

Mr. SHAW. I would respectfully disagree with the gentleman.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MINETA. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BOLAND. I appreciate the remarks of the gentleman from California who is a Regent for the Smithsonian and is familiar with the Freer Art Gallery.

I do not know whether some of the Members have ever been to the Freer Art Gallery, but I must say it has to be one of the finest art galleries in the world. If you have never seen it, you ought to see it. I am sure my friend from Florida has seen it and anyone that serves on Mr. MINETA's committee has been there.

What the gentleman from California says, I think, is correct, and it is more than just basement space. Actually, it does provide for the renovation of the Freer basement for a new gallery, and an expanded conservation laboratory and additional collection storage space below the Freer courtyard.

□ 2050

I wonder if the gentleman from Florida would agree with this? He does mention 8,000 square feet, and if we provide $2.5 million, it comes to something like $600 a square foot. But it is really more than 8,000 square feet. The substructure has to be built first. While the Sackler Museum is being built, it would be wise to start the construction on the basement of the Freer Gallery because it would cost less money in the long run.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] has expired.

(On request of Mr. BOLAND and by unanimous consent, Mr. MINETA was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. MINETA. I am pleased to yield further to my colleague, the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. BOLAND. It would be less costly to start the construction of the basement of the Freer Gallery under that part of the courtyard that is not being used as a link to the Sackler Gallery. So we would have to count the 8,000 square feet as the subbasement, with an additional 7,000 square feet above that, for a total of about 15,000 square feet.

I agree with the gentleman from Florida that it still comes to around $300 a square foot, doubling the square footage and reducing the $600 figure by $300 a square foot.

As the gentleman from California has indicated, this museum now is about 62 years old and has been serving the population of the United States for that period of time. It was built as a result of a bequest by Mr. Freer, and incidentally, in the will it provides that no exhibits and no storage can be maintained outside of the Freer Gallery.

There is an absolute need for an addition to the Freer Gallery. If we did not have the limitation in the bequest in the Freer will, we might have done this a little bit cheaper. The fact of the matter is, we could have used part of the space in the new Sackler Museum or part of the space in the Smithsonian itself, but the will does not permit the Smithsonian to do that. It all has to be stored and exhibited in the Freer Gallery.

I think it is wise, really, to go ahead with $2.5 million now, and as the gentleman from Florida, Mr. SHAW, said, an additional $2.5 million would be needed in the next year.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MINETA. I would be pleased to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SHAW. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have had discussion as to the design and renovation of the Freer basement. We are not talking about that money. That is an additional $2 million that we are not even talking about. So that $2 million stays in the bill if the Shaw amendment to the amendment is passed.

What I am talking about is the $2.5 million, plus another $2.5 million, for a total of $5 million, which is for 8,000 square feet of storage space.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Chairman, let me reclaim my time and also indicate that this is not just conventional office space. This is a facility that has to take care of these art objects that require special environmentally controlled conditions. These are irreplaceable treasures, art objects of a civilization that dates back to the dawn of history.

So we just cannot compare this structure to a typical office kind of a building. The fact that we have this opportunity, since we are doing the underpinning at the Freer Art Gallery, to be able to build this link to the Freer Art Gallery to the quadrangle project, I do not think we ought to give it up.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman from Florida that when the Smithsonian witnesses appeared before our committee, I was struck by the size of the numbers as well. I asked the witnesses for the Smithsonian to meet with our staff and with the Senate staff to try to find out what the actual figures were.

They presumably have agreed upon these as being the correct figures. I accepted their estimate, and the statements by the gentleman from Florida have concerned me because I would not want this job to be overexpensive as well. I want to point out, however, that I am impressed by the fact that the cost for constructing the Quad itself, which starts from a hole in the ground and just builds up from that, is assessed at being over $200 a square foot. That in itself is an expensive number. But that is a simple project by comparison with what the Freer has to do in this instance.

The Freer has to preserve its shell. It has to preserve its art objects. It has no place to put them. It has to, at the same time, try to protect them while it excavates under the building and tries to brace the building against whatever contingencies may happen.

I certainly do not want to pay more than should be paid for this building. I wonder whether the gentleman can tell me what he is referring to. He and the gentleman from Tennessee have been referring to a book there.

Mr. SHAW. If the gentleman will yield, I would be glad. That is the Smithsonian's 1986 budget justification supplied to us by the Smithsonian.

Mr. YATES. What does that justification tell the gentleman?

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. SUNDQUIST. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, it says, "For fiscal year 1986, an amount of $2 million is sought for the design and renovation of the Freer basement." That is the first part. "The tunnel connection from the Sackler Gallery to the Freer Gallery funded within the Quadrangle budget requires excavating one-third of the area beneath the existing Freer courtyard."

A further amount of $2.5 million is requested for fiscal year 1986 for the excavation of this room we are talking about.

We are not talking about doing anything with the tunnel or the connection. We are not talking about interfering with the basement remodeling. What we are talking about is 8,000 square feet of new space at a cost of $680 per square foot, $2.5 million this year, $2.5 million next year.

Mr. YATES. May I ask the gentleman, is the cost of $600 per square foot in that report?

Mr. SUNDQUIST. No, the cost is not in there; it is a mathematical computation of dividing the dollars by the amount of square feet.

Mr. MINETA. If the gentleman would yield, I would like to direct a question to the gentleman from Florida.

Where does the 8,000 square feet come from?

Mr. SHAW. That is the budget justification which was supplied to the Public Buildings and Grounds Subcommittee, and I would be glad to give the gentleman a copy of it.

Mr. MINETA. As far as I know, it is 15,000 square feet rather than 8,000, if we are talking about the same space.

Mr. SHAW. If we start adding those figures up the connection—what the problem is is that you are looking at the connecting link and everything else.

Let me say, if I may, what we are talking about here is the total project and maybe we will get this into the proper perspective. We are talking about the renovation of the basement for $2 million, we are talking about the connecting link, and we are also talking about the new basement construction, the latter of which I am opposed to. All of this has a total price tag of more than $14.3 million. We are only going after $2.5 million. But this total project is over $14.3 million.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, may I reclaim my time to read from the statement that the Smithsonian gave us?

An amount of $2 million is sought for the design and renovation of 24,000 square feet of the lower level of the Freer that will, for the most part, be dedicated to public purposes.

A further amount of $2.5 million is required for the excavation, underpinning and construction of a structural shell for the two-thirds of the courtyard area that is not part of the Quadrangle link but which will create an additional 15,000 square feet of space primarily for collection storage.

□ 2100

That is the $15,000 the gentleman from California mentioned.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, that includes the existing basement and that is an additional $2 million, so that is a separate project. We have not affected that project at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. YATES was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I have this suggestion to make. I think what I would like to do, I would like to take the gentleman's amendment with the understanding that we will try to work out the correct figures with the Senate as we go into the conference and come to the correct conclusion.

I know that my friends who are regents of the Smithsonian may be somewhat disappointed in this, but I think the gentleman has raised a valid point. The figures are not specific. They are not certain.

Mr. Chairman, I propose to accept the amendment, with that understanding.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. Yes.

Mr. BOLAND. Well, Mr. Chairman, I welcome the suggestion of the distinguished chairman of this committee. I think it is a good suggestion and I would hope that the membership would follow that advice.

Mr. SHAW. Mr. Chairman, I would welcome that. I know the gentleman from Illinois and I want the same thing. Even though it is a very important building, it is a very important renovation, we still want to be sure that are getting our money's worth.

Mr. YATES. We will try to get the correct answer.

Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

● Mr. SUNDQUIST. Mr. Chairman, I submit the following material for insertion in the RECORD regarding the construction at the Smithsonian's Freer Gallery:

QUADRANGLE AND FREER RELATED CONSTRUCTION/RENOVATION INFORMATION ON SELECTED SUBPROJECTS

CONNECTING LINK

The Freer and the Sackler constitute the Center for Asian Art. The connecting link will provide safe and secure underground movement between the Sackler Gallery and the Freer Gallery with direct passage for the public to exhibition areas of both galleries meeting safety, health and disabled access code requirements presently not met in the Freer building. The link will also provide separate and secure passage between collection and staff areas in both galleries. The concept of joint administration and operation of the Galleries, including sharing of conservation facilities located in the Freer, is dependent on access and communications via this underground connection.

The funding account for the link is the Quadrangle federal construction appropriation and Institution trust funds in equal amounts. When the $3.5 million budget was established for the Freer link, planning was incomplete and the benefit of subsequent experience in underpinning structures at this site was not available. Subsequently we have completed our planning and have learned that our approach to underpinning must be more conservative. Accordingly the proposed budget has been adjusted to reflect more current knowledge. Discussions with the A/E concerning the present design and cost estimate resulted in an assessment that design refinements, as well as revised underpinning and structural plans, have added approximately $800,000 to the cost of the earlier design concept. In addition, based on advice from the General Services Administration, an amount of $250,000 per year, or in total, $1 million, has been added to the budget for escalation of labor and material costs and for increased construction management costs.

An amount of $310,000 was obligated in the fall of 1984 for preparation of design concepts and working drawings and specifications. An additional amount of $115,000 is anticipated for design and construction management. These amounts are being provided from Quadrangle funds, both federal and trust.

Furnishing of the Link will include approximately $10,000 of public seating to be funded from the Quadrangle furnishing sub-account using federal and trust funds on a matching basis.

FREER BASEMENT RENOVATION

This project will convert approximately 24,000 square feet of the current basement administrative area to new and more effective use, following relocation of staff presently occupying this space to the Quadrangle. The renovated space will provide much needed additional space for exhibitions, conservation, and collection storage to support the Freer collection, as well as the joint operating needs of the Freer and Sackler Galleries.

Unrestricted trust funds in the amount of $181,500 are committed to the GSA for design purposes and are expected to be obligated in Spring 1985. Federal R&R funds in the amount of $2 million are included in the Institution's FY 1986 budget request for construction.

Furnishing and equipping of the renovated basement area will be accomplished using existing items and seeking future federal Salaries and Expenses funds over a several year period. These additional funds, as well as those required for furnishing the expanded courtyard space (described below) are estimated to cost $2.3 million.

FREER COURTYARD

Excavating and construction of a two-story space beneath the existing courtyard garden will provide approximately 8,000 new square feet for required object storage and reference areas for the Freer Gallery exclusively. About one-third of the courtyard will be excavated on one level as part of the connecting link, meaning for practical and economic considerations, full courtyard expansion should be accomplished at the same time. Future construction in this area, including necessary excavation and underpinning, would be excessively expensive and so disruptive to the Museum, that it would not be feasible.

Unrestricted trust funds in the amount of $423,500 are committed to the GSA for design purposes and are expected to be obligated in Spring 1985. Federal R&R funds in the amount of $5 million are being requested for construction, half in FY 1986 and the balance in FY 1987.

Furnishing and equipping costs for courtyard expansion, as well as for renovation of the basement, will be requested as part of future year federal Salaries and Expenses budgets, as needed to supplement existing equipment. Current estimate is $2.3 million.●

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

To address the space problem at the Freer Gallery of Art, this bill includes funds for a renovation and improvement project designed to expand Freer collection storage space by 43 percent and provide 12 percent more exhibition space. Right now, the Freer Gallery has very limited exhibition space and only about 7,000 square feet of storage space. Corridors and offices are used to store furniture.

Painting storage is overflowing and other valuable objects could be damaged unless proper space is created.

The Smithsonian seized an ideal opportunity to improve the situation by combining this project with the construction of the quadrangle project now underway. Construction plans included tearing up half of the Freer courtyard to build a tunnel to the new underground museum. With this construction already in the works, the Smithsonian developed a plan to efficiently expand the project to include increased space for the Freer.

The bill provides $2.5 million for the excavation, underpinning, and construction of a structural shell for the two-thirds of the courtyard area that is not part of the quadrangle link. This expansion will create an additional 15,000 square feet of space primarily for collections storage. This project is a one-time opportunity to take advantage of work already planned for this area. In fact, this construction project was included in the President's budget and recommended by the committee.

Let me also address two concerns expressed by my good friend, the gentleman from Florida.

Besides the space requirements needed for museums generally, the Freer has a special problem. Under the Freer will that donated the museum, no part of the collection can be removed from the facility. As you can imagine, this presents special problems with storage and exhibition space.

There's also been discussion about the cost of the renovation. I understand the gentleman's concern, but any museum storage space must be customized to provide environmentally controlled conditions necessary to protect valuable artworks. In addition, special care must be exercised in dealing with an historic landmark building of architectural distinction.

The amendment by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] would deny this unique opportunity and may force a more expensive solution to the space problems at the Freer later on.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to oppose the amendment.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment which would delete $2.5 million from the Smithsonian's account for restoration of buildings. Currently, the Freer Gallery of Art is limited in its exhibition space and currently has only about 7,000 square feet of storage space, including areas in its attic. Corridors and offices are used to store furniture and paintings.

An ideal opportunity to correct these deficiencies arises in conjunction with the already planned excavation of one-third of the Freer's courtyard for construction of a tunnel which will link the Freer Gallery with the Sackler Gallery. A project that is included within the quadrangle construction budget. A parallel renovation of the lower level of the Freer and excavation of the remaining two-thirds of the courtyard would increase Freer collection storage space by 43 percent and provide 12 percent more exhibition space. In this regard, an amount of $2.5 million is necessary for the excavation and construction of a structural shell for the two-thirds of the courtyard area.

The courtyard expansion in connection with the ongoing quadrangle link represents a one-time opportunity to take advantage of work similar in character and piggy-back the excavation of the other part. The costs of the alteration and excavation projects are considerable, approximately $180 per square foot, due to the care that must be exercised in dealing with an historic landmark building of architectural distinction and further that the space being created is not conventional office space. If the excavation is not done at this time it is highly unlikely that it will ever be done.

Therefore, I urge my colleagues to oppose the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SHAW] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES], as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the distinguished subcommittee chairman where in this bill the National Museum Act grants are concealed and how much are they for fiscal year 1986?

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield.

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the distinguished chairman.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I invite the gentleman's attention to line 4 of page 57, which shows that $793,000 is made available to carry out the provisions of the National Museum Act.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the distinguished chairman if that language is protected from a point of order?

Mr. YATES. It is, may I say to the gentleman.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the distinguished chairman for the information.

Mr. Chairman, for the last 4 years this program has not been authorized. Nevertheless, the committee under the protection of a rule waiving points of order has continued, in my judgment, to fund, unwisely and in an unauthorized manner, a program which probably most of the Members of this Congress are not aware of and to which probably most of them would not subscribe

It is a very small amount of money, roughly $800,000. It is, however, spent on a very unusual program in which grants are awarded to various projects in museology. For instance, in the 1985 program, three grants were given for management and observation of herbarium projects. I do not know if any of you guys—any of you people have ever been in a herbarium, but I will bet you did not know we were giving grants to people to study them.

I suppose you probably did not know that five of these grants were awarded overseas, three of them in London, two of them in Rome.

Let me read you a couple other grants, but before I do that, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the students are serious students. The work is in its own way serious work and these people are not living off the fat of the land on the taxpayers' money. They are rather small stipends to graduate students and postgraduate students in museology.

The problem is these could and should be taken care of privately. The Federal Government has no reason to be in them, particularly when the program is not authorized.

The one that I like best is a $10,000 project, research on "the use of micromanipulation for splitting the embryos of antelopes and exotic sea lions and on interspecies as well as intraspecies transfer of the resulting germinal material."

I will bet you did not know that museology grants were going for that sort of thing.

I will bet you also did not know that we are investigating the environment of historic adobe museums and repairing guidelines on the proper management and care of their collections, because adobe is so different from any other kind of construction.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is a ridiculous situation. I do not want to make light of these grants, because I do not like to take advantage of silly titles when some fine research is being done and education is being achieved and absorbed.

Nevertheless, I really take objection to the fact that this program has been funded for 4 years, when the authorizing committee has refused authorization.

I serve notice to the distinguished chairman that if this program continues, his committee is going to have great trouble with this bill in the future. It will not be simply a matter of a few hours debate. We will be on this bill for weeks next year.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the distinguished chairman.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I was unaware that the authorizing committee has refused to fund this program.

Mr. FRENZEL. I will tell the gentleman, the last year it was authorized was fiscal year 1982.

Mr. YATES. Well, may I say to the gentleman that is true of a number of programs in this bill. For example, the Bureau of Land Management and other agencies that are essential; the Department of Energy is another; the authorizing committees have not gotten around to funding those bills, and yet they tell us to go forward with the appropriation.

The gentleman raises a different point, though, when he says that the authorizing committee refuses to authorize this legislation.

I want to tell the gentleman that I will check with the authorizing committee in view of his objection and I will try to find out whether they can present legislation so that next year we well not have to ask for a rule for this.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for his contribution and for his explanation.

I will tell the gentleman, with all due modesty, that one of the reasons the committee cannot pass it is because I have not been willing to let it do so.

I think the problem is that the committee is not afraid of me, but it is afraid to take these kinds of projects to the floor and subject them to debate, because they are not going to pass.

Mr. YATES. Which is the authorizing committee, may I ask?

Mr. FRENZEL. The Committee on House Administration.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

CONSTRUCTION

For necessary expenses to construct, equip, and furnish the Center for African, Near Eastern, and Asian Cultures in the area south of the original Smithsonian Institution Building, $4,000,000, to remain available until expended.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For the upkeep and operations of the National Gallery of Art, the protection and care of the works of art therein, and administrative expenses incident thereto, as authorized by the Act of March 24, 1937 (50 Stat. 51), as amended by the public resolution of April 13, 1939 (Public Resolution 9, Seventy-sixth Congress), including services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109; payment in advance when authorized by the treasurer of the Gallery for membership in library, museum, and art associations or societies whose publications or services are available to members only, or to members at a price lower than to the general public; purchase, repair, and cleaning of uniforms for guards, and uniforms, or allowances therefor, for other employees as authorized by law (5 U.S.C. 5901-5902); purchase, or rental of devices and services for protecting buildings and contents thereof, and maintenance, alteration, improvement, and repair of buildings, approaches, and grounds; and purchase of services for restoration and repair of works of art for the National Gallery of Art by contracts made, without advertising, with individuals, firms, or organizations at such rates or prices and under such terms and conditions as the Gallery may deem proper, $34,379,000, of which not to exceed $2,200,000 for the special exhibition program shall remain available until expended.

REPAIR, RESTORATION AND RENOVATION OF BUILDINGS

For necessary expenses of repair, restoration and renovation of buildings owned or occupied by the National Gallery of Art, by contract or otherwise, as authorized, $2,900,000, to remain available until expended: Provided, That contracts awarded for environmental systems, protection systems, and exterior repair or renovation of buildings of the National Gallery of Art may be negotiated with selected contractors and awarded on the basis of contractor qualifications as well as price.

WOODROW WILSON INTERNATIONAL CENTER FOR SCHOLARS

SALARIES AND EXPENSES

For expenses necessary in carrying out the provisions of the Woodrow Wilson Memorial Act of 1968 (82 Stat. 1356), including hire of passenger vehicles and services as authorized by 5 U.S.C. 3109, $3,342,000.

NATIONAL FOUNDATION ON THE ARTS AND THE HUMANITIES

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE ARTS

GRANTS AND ADMINISTRATION

For necessary expenses to carry out the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965, as amended, $144,118,000, of which $128,218,000 shall be available to the National Endowment for the Arts for the support of projects and productions in the arts through assistance to groups and individuals pursuant to section 5(c) of the Act, of which not less than 20 per centum of the funds provided for section 5(c) shall be available for assistance pursuant to section 5(g) of the Act, and $15,900,000 shall be available for administering the functions of the Act.

MATCHING GRANTS

To carry out the provisions of section 10(a)(2) of the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965, as amended, $30,882,000, to remain available until September 30, 1987, to the National Endowment for the Arts, of which $21,617,000 shall be available for purposes of section 5(1): Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for obligation only in such amounts as may be equal to the total amounts of gifts, bequests, and devises of money, and other property accepted by the Chairman or by grantees of the Endowment under the provisions of section 10(a)(2), subsections 11(a)(2)(A) and 11(a)(3)(A) during the current and preceding fiscal years for which equal amounts have not previously been appropriated.

AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. ARMEY

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments, and ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. BENNETT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY]?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. ARMEY: Page 61, line 7, strike out "$144,118,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$134,260,000".

Page 61, line 7, strike out "$128,218,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$118,678,000".

Page 61, line 13, strike out "$15,900,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$15,582,000".

Page 61, line 18, strike out "$30,882,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$29,400,000".

Page 61, line 20, strike out "$21,617,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$20,580,000".

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, my amendments deal with the National Endowment for the Arts. The fiscal year 1985 NEA appropriation was $163.6 million. For fiscal year 1986, the Appropriations Committee has recommended a 7-percent increase to $175 million, $11 million above the House-passed budget resolution.

In the 20 years since NEA was first created, annual appropriations have increased approximately 8,000 percent, Mr. Chairman, from a little over $2 million to $164 million.

My amendment is a simple one. It merely freezes the NEA appropriation at 1985 levels, thereby saving the taxpayers approximately $11.34 million from the committee's recommendation.

□ 2110

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are all aware of the budget deficit; we are all aware of the difficult problems in spending that we have. The fact of the matter is we must make tradeoffs if we are going to control Federal spending.

We have asked many programs and agencies, and we will ask many more, to take spending cuts. And in many cases where we are asking for people to take spending cuts or freezes, we are asking about programs that deal with the essential needs of the American people.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. ARMEY. I yield for a moment.

Mr. AUCOIN. The gentleman has made the statement that the figures the committee provides for the arts are over the House-passed budget resolution. There is no function in the House-passed budget resolution for the arts as such, and I am wondering what the gentleman is referring to.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARMEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I know that my colleague from Texas knows that, in fact, according to the CBO, the budget analysis, in fact, does list the House-passed budget amount for the National Endowment for the Arts, and also for the National Endowment for the Humanities, and also for the Institute of Museum Services. And it lists the National Endowment of the Arts at $164 million for the House-passed budget as well as the other body's passed budget.

So there seems to be no dispute on that in conference.

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. AUCOIN. Will the gentleman yield to me again?

Mr. ARMEY. For one more moment. I do have more points that I would like to make.

Mr. AUCOIN. I understand that, and I will ask unanimous consent to give the gentleman additional time if he needs it, and I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

It is not my understanding that the House-passed budget resolution is so line-item specific as to in effect provide a duplicative appropriation for these items. And I do not think the gentleman is accurate when he says that this subcommittee has breached the House-passed budget resolution.

Mr. ARMEY. With the gentleman's consent, I will express my agreement with the gentleman from Texas. But even if I do that, let me concede your point, and let me return to the point that I made earlier, that since 1965, the National Endowment for the Arts has had an 8,000-percent increase, from a little over $2 million to $164 million.

Certainly nobody in this body wants to suggest, in light of the difficult budgetary times we have had since 1965, that NEA has been given any short shrift in budget appropriations.

The problem I was addressing before I yielded was that we are asking many programs and many agencies across the National to take their cuts and to live with the freeze. This is something we must do. Everybody is aware of the budget deficit. Everybody is aware of the problems we have in trying to get a handle on that.

I am saying that NEA, that speaks to important needs, and let me address that because I share the committee's awareness of how important the arts are. The arts do give us a certain dimension to our lives; they add beauty and, indeed, a perspective on human events and human action that is important to us. I know the committee appreciates that, and I also want to express my appreciation for the hard work the committee has done. The committee has been very thorough.

But in this case, I think we have perhaps indulged here a very important, but yet favored, interest over that of many competing interests.

Now it is in that respect, it is for a budgetary reason that I rise to ask for the freeze, to ask the NEA to take the same cuts as somebody else.

Let me speak now to another concern.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY] has expired.

(On request of Mr. AUCOIN and by unanimous consent, Mr. ARMEY was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARMEY. Let me take my 2 minutes.

Mr. AUCOIN. I just got the gentleman time. Would he yield to me?

Mr. ARMEY. All right, if I can have one of those minutes.

Mr. AUCOIN. Surely.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the chairman.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman yielding. The gentleman made the statement that the program has grown by 8,000 percent since 1965. I would have to tell the gentleman that what he is referring to is the growth of the program since its inception.

If he wants to apply the same standard to the Department of Defense, for example, I can only guess at what the percentage of growth would be from the time of it being an embryo to the point where it became a full-fledged agency. The fact of the matter is this program has grown by 2 percent per year over the last several years leading us to the figure we have today, a very modest, moderate rate of growth, and not nearly as radical, or radical at all as the gentleman would seem to suggest.

Mr. ARMEY. Again, if you will, I will concede your point. And I would suggest that perhaps the Defense Department—I have not checked the figures—but perhaps they have not grown by the 2 percent that you have talked about. And furthermore, I do not think I would follow your suggestion that I equate funding of the National Endowment for the Arts with the national defense. I think one is an absolutely imperative function of the Government that we must carry out; and the other is, indeed, I think, an indulgence of, again, as I said, an important human interest and desire, but not one that is an essential function of the Government.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ARMEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I am reading from the Chronicle of Higher Education in Washington for May 15, and it says this:

> At least five hearings have been scheduled by the panel's Subcommittee on Select Education during the coming months to look at the endowments activities in more detail. Before the committee approved the bill, Rep. Richard Armey, Republican of Texas, attacked some poetry grants financed by the arts endowment, charging that the poems produced were obscene.
> He also charged that there was cronyism involved in the award of some grants, and that members of peer review panels had approved awards that went to publishing companies they were associated with. He won a commitment from committee leaders that the hearings would look into his allegations.

I would ask the gentleman if that is a correct depiction of what happened?

Mr. ARMEY. Yes, it is; and I appreciate the gentleman raising that because that is the point to which I was moving.

In fact, I did raise that point about 2 months ago. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] will probably be speaking soon and is also concerned about that, and he has taken the liberty to bring those poems to the floor. I would be happy to have any Member of the House read those poems.

The fact of the matter is I have very real concerns about the matter on which the NEA spends funds, but also the manner in which they make spending decisions, and I raise those questions. I raised them with the National Endowment for the Arts. I have not been happy.

Just recently, I fell into a publication called "Z-Political Fictions." It says in here that it is funded, supported in part by the National Endowment for the Arts. I have checked with the National Endowment. It took them 2 days to confirm that, yes, indeed, they have given a grant to some agency that in turn had given money here. They did not even know what they were funding.

I think it is a matter, it is a requirement of our office that when we appropriate funds to any agency we know where those funds are and give surveillance. The agency must account to us. The agency has not been cooperative with me, and I do not believe that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] would suggest that they have been cooperative with him.

But I do have the poems here that did bother me at that time and do bother me at this time. I sat in my office with seven young, virile men, and not one of us could read several of these poems aloud, they were that bad.

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ARMEY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I am concerned with the gentleman's statement that the agency has not been cooperating with you. I called Frank Hodsoll personally and I told him that I knew of your efforts and those of Mr. DELAY, and I told him that he ought to cooperate fully with you, and he told me that he would.

Now I am informed by the people at the National Endowment for the Arts that you have had your staff members there, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] has his staff members there, and they are pouring through the files and they are trying to find additional poems. Is that not correct?

Mr. ARMEY. I do not know that any of my staff have been there. I do believe Mr. DELAY's staff have.

But again, do we not have not only the right but the responsibility to pour through the files, as it were? If we paid for the material, should it not be accessible to us, or should it be something that, indeed, they should prefer we not seek out?

Mr. YATES. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ARMEY. Yes; I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. The gentleman said it was correct that you had won a commitment from the committee leaders to look into your allegations. Does not the gentleman believe that that is the proper forum to go into these questions?

That committee is now undertaking hearings for the purpose of determining whether NEA should be reauthorized. I would think that that is the place that the gentleman should bring his complaints, as he did. And I think that the committee should go into those questions.

I will tell the gentleman in passing also that we raised the question of the buddy-buddy system, that the question raised some time ago, and we went into hearings on that periodically during the tenure of Nancy Hanks as the Administrator and during the tenure of Liv Biddle as the Administrator, and we have gone into it with Mr. Hodsoll as well, because we hear these rumors and we hear these statements.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY] has again expired.

(On request of Mr. YATES and by unanimous consent, Mr. ARMEY was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

□ 2120

Mr. YATES. It is important that we do this; the gentleman is right. Because the peer panel review is the guts of this system. It provides for supervision, for review by the peers of those who are applying and it is essential, it is essential that a fair system, the essence of fairness be there because so much goes into the application, so much of a person's life and hopes and dreams goes into the applications that go into these endowments for approval. And it is necessary that they get a fair trial and they get a fair hearing by them. So it is important that the panels be constituted by people who know their business and by people who are the essence of fairness. I take very seriously the gentleman's allegation.

Mr. ARMEY. If I may reclaim my time.

I appreciate the gentleman's concern and know he did indeed respond to us. After he responded to our inquiries, I know NEA responded much more favorably. My suggestion is that we do it now for budgetary reasons first and foremost but also out of these concerns, vote now on the freeze and at the same time talk to NEA, pardon the vernacular as they demonstrate that they are doing better we may be able to do this sometime in the future.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARMEY. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I serve as the ranking Republican on the Select Education Committee which is going through the reauthorization of the National Endowment for the Arts. I respect the chairman of the subcommittee a great deal, who is very familiar with these endowments and has worked in the vineyards through the years. I think the arguments of the gentleman from Texas, and I listened carefully to him as he presented these as budgetary and economic arguments, that the National Endowment for the Arts should not be singled out for an increase.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman.

I think the gentleman from Texas made his arguments on a budgetary and an economic basis that we should not single out the National Endowment for the Arts as the program that would break out of the House-passed budget resolution, as the program that would break out of a fiscal year 1985 freeze. The gentleman's motion is straightforward. This is not an authorizing program. This is simply an appropriation. I think the gentleman's amendment would appropriate a fiscal year budget freeze in line with the House-passed budget resolution.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a response?

Mr. YATES. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman.

My disappointment in the material and procedures as I found at NEA was only slightly greater than my disappointment in the level of enthusiasm with which the committee responded to my concerns. So I do not take great confidence in the extent to which I was given assurance. Nevertheless, we still, I think have to start with this budgetary concern and see that as the foundation of our concern. Then the others are of course points that you mentioned.

Mr. YATES. Let me tell the gentleman how this committee acted. Why did we, knowing the constraints that the House was voting on other programs, why did we increase this program? We did this year what we did last year. Last year the committee voted $175 million for the National Endowment for the Arts, the same sum as this year. That amount was subjected to a 3-percent cut across the board in the House of Representatives and it reduced it to $169 million approximately. It was then submitted to, in bargaining with the other body, we agreed upon $167 million and then there was another cut that was made necessary in order to persuade the White House to sign the bill and it went down to $163 million. That was the background for what we did this year as well. We started out with $175 million. What is a freeze? When we talk about freezing a particular level, must it be the same amount for each program? Or are we talking about the totals?

If we are talking about the totals, our bill, according to our calculations, is $346 million below the level of the same bill in 1985.

What we did was to reduce the 1985 program levels for 88 different programs. Having done that, we looked around and we said, "Well, some of these other programs should have increases." We put increases over the budget for Indian health programs, for example, we put increases over the budget for Indian education, increases over the budget for various kinds of public lands and public parks and things of that sort. We tried to balance the bill. Had we maintained the strict freeze approach that I think the gentleman is using, we would have not gone over the 1985 levels in programs that to us were manifestly in need of extra funding. But we nevertheless had our target on the overall level of the bill. And in that respect we brought this House a responsible bill, a bill that cut as we thought the House would cut. But we thought that the arts for which the committee approved $175 million last year should have the same chance this year to start out at that level.

That is the explanation as to why this bill got to $175 million.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I want to concur in the remarks of the distinguished subcommittee chairman. I think it is a complete misunderstanding of the budget process to believe that it requires the appropriations subcommittees and the full Appropriations Committee to hold every program at the same level as last year. That just is not so. First of all, the budget resolution can in no way enforce that level of detail on the House. It simply sets certain levels for functions set forth in the budget resolution. The 1974 Budget Act then provides that the full amount of money to be appropriated is passed on by the Budget Committee to the Appropriations Committee and the Appropriations Committee then divides that money among its subcommittees. And the gentleman's subcommittee got its 302(b) allocation from the full Appropriations Committee and this is within it. And that is what is necessary to enforce the budget process.

Now in terms of the sentiment of this House to have a freeze, I submit to the gentleman that it is simply necessary to look at the appropriation bill last year and then the appropriation bill this year.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(On request of Mr. GREEN, and by unanimous consent, Mr. YATES was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. It has never been contemplated that every item in every appropriation bill cannot grow from last year. I would like to ask any of the gentlemen who are advocating this amendment whether they voted for the Dellums amendment on the space defense initiative when the Defense Authorization Act for 1986 came on this floor? It they really believe that every program in every bill has to be frozen at the current year's level, why did they not vote for the Dellums amendment to freeze the space defense initiative? I would suggest that this bill ought to be put to no different test from the defense bill in that respect.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARMEY. I do not believe we ought to freeze across the board. I voted to raise spending in some levels. My preference would have been to cut this by 5 percent, this particular appropriation. Others I may want to freeze. I settled on a freeze here because I was trying to work out a response that we could pass in this House in an orderly fashion. But, yes indeed, I agree with the gentleman, freeze is not necessarily a magic word; sometimes we freeze, sometimes we raise, sometimes we lower. But a 7-percent raise for the National Endowment for the Arts when I have the concerns I do at this time is not something I can vote for.

I think quite frankly a freeze was generous on my part.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. AUCOIN. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I have voted for freeze amendments myself on the floor this year. But I want to tell my colleague that this bill is under current-year levels. Let us keep that in mind when we consider this bill. It is entirely appropriate for this subcommittee to make adjustments within that ceiling between various accounts. That is what appropriation committees are all about.

Furthermore, in eight of the agencies funded by the subcommittee, we make cuts in 1986 over the 1985 level.

I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

□ 2130

Mr. YATES. Just to supplement what the gentleman has said, we are $346 million below the 1985 level, and we are $284 million below our 302(b) allocation, under the House-approved budget bill.

So we did act responsibly, and I suggest we acted responsibly with respect to the arts program as well. I gave the gentleman the background; I respect the gentleman's opinion, I know that he is serious and I know that his amendment is serious.

I suggest, however, and I would hope that he would support the committee.

Mr. REGULA. Would the chairman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the ranking member.

Mr. REGULA. I thank the chairman for yielding, and that is an accurate statement; that we made priority judgments. That is why we have committees, to determine what is the appropriate level for many, many different functions, and I think this is a reflection of the fact that we felt that this had a higher priority than some others and we made the adjustments, but the total is still $300 million under the 1985 level for the bill, and that is good management.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to reemphasize something I said in my opening remarks, and that is that this appropriation generates a lot of private money, because most of the NEA appropriation is tied to matching funds at the local level. In the case of programmatic appropriations, it is a 3-to-1 match; in the case of some of the other portions, it is a 1-for-1 match.

So in effect, for every dollar we appropriate to the NEA, we generate at least an additional dollar in the private sector, and in some instances much more.

Mr. ARMEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ARMEY. I really must take exception with the logic presented. What the gentleman is saying is, for every dollar we give the NEA, we require them to initiate and secure a transfer of some private money from some other purpose to their purpose. That is in effect, they have to earn part of their way.

It is not as if they generate dollars back to the U.S. Treasury or back to the taxpayer.

Mr. REGULA. No, that is not what I said.

Mr. ARMEY. Well, but there is a suggestion——

Mr. REGULA. I said it generates private dollars toward the activities nationally in the art field.

Mr. ARMEY. Again, from my point of view, because I hear a lot of budgetary talk here that is really quite fascinating to me.

Where I come from, you freeze what you had to spend last time; that is where you freeze. I would like to freeze at where, at what level I wanted to have last year, but I could not freeze at that level, you see.

Also, if you tell me I am going to generate another dollar back or in some way; that does not mean a thing to me. If I give you a dollar and say I am going to generate another dollar for myself.

Mr. REGULA. I understand the gentleman's point of view, and I am just making the point that it does generate additional dollars.

I think the important thing is the committee's responsibility is to make priority judgments within the constraints of fiscal year 1985 and hopefully less, as we have achieved.

Mr. ARMEY. If the gentleman will yield again.

Mr. REGULA. I yield further to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ARMEY. I do want to reemphasize that I have watched the committees' work today, all day, and you have done a good job; you have been very thorough, and you have made priority judgments. It just happens that this is one judgment that I disagree with, and I think we have the Whole House, then, to adjudicate such differences of opinion.

Mr. REGULA. That is a fair——

Mr. ARMEY. I do want to agree that I have a great deal of respect for the hard work, the judgment and the sense of preference revealed by the members of the committee. I just happen, in this case, to disagree and appeal to the House for its point of view.

Mr. REGULA. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, a number of points have been raised that I think deserve a little clarification. Let us deal first with the issue of budget.

In the budget, what we do is we deal with functional categories that go across committee jurisdictional lines. As has been pointed out here today, the Interior Appropriations Committee is under, I repeat, is under the budget that the House Budget Committee has adopted.

That does not mean that various elements, as in the case of the arts funding, are below that number, and as has been explained, it is up to the committee—not to the Budget Committee, not to anybody else—to make decisions as to how to allocate the money.

Now they have decided to make the incremental increase in the arts funding this year over last year. There are good reasons for that.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA] pointed out one reason for increased funding that bears further explanation. The point that he made was that the money that is provided through the NEA and the NEH serves to leverage a great deal of private money.

As most of my colleagues know, the vast majority of money for the arts comes from the appropriate sources in this country; namely, not the Government but individuals and institutions. The greatest subsidizer of the arts in America are the individual artists themselves who, for the most part, work without recognition for long periods of their lives, dedicated to their art.

There is also a great deal of money that comes from corporations and from individuals. A very, very small portion of money for the arts comes from the National Government. The small portion of the money that comes from the National Government goes to provide money toward those fledgling artists or groups to encourage excellence, access for the public, financial stability, and educational opportunities.

The principles of the original act in 1965 have been met in a glorious fashion. The evidence is all across the country in the form of new community orchestras, theater groups, and art museums.

Let me try to explain why a little public money can lead to a great deal of private support. Let us assume that you have a fledgling senior citizen orchestra in your district that needs the money for sheet music, or might need a small, additional incremental amount of money to go on tour.

If the NEA decides that such a venture is worthwhile they will, after careful review, provide a small amount of money for this project, and this effort must then be matched by individuals and corporations in the community so that that orchestra can do additional concerts, or in the case of some orchestras, travel around the country.

The money, the small amount of money that is provided here, leverages millions of dollars from private individuals and from corporations.

If you cut this budget, if the budget is reduced in this amount; it will mean that the private money will be lost as well. The old Reagan contentions that if the NEA is cut that the reductions will be made up by private sources is a fallacy. Reducing the NEA will stop some orchestras from touring, limit the activity of the museum, and help to stifle creative and talented people in our country. We will lose much more than money by this reduction.

Let me deal for one moment with this question of the poetry that has been raised.

The gentleman from Texas I do not believe would make the argument that the reductions that they are seeking here in any way are connected to the issue of the offending poetry. Because it is clear that we cannot do that. That has to take place in the authorizing committee. That has to be dealt with when we deal with the whole literature grant program, which in my opinion is an excellent program.

□ 2140

So, let us not suggest, for a moment, that the poetry that is being passed out on the floor is somehow going to be removed by this amendment. It will not be. It is like dropping an atomic bomb on an artist colony to get rid of a few of the offending poets. You would kill a whole variety of music programs, of art programs with this approach, if you believe that this amendment is somehow going to do away with one or two poems that offend you, look again.

So I ask you, my colleagues, to understand that this bill is under the budget, No. 1; No. 2, it leverages enormous amounts of private money. And if we decide to reduce it, as the gentleman from Texas suggests, we are going to work a hardship on a great number of people that, frankly, in my opinion, do not deserve to be hurt.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment, along with the two amendments that would likely follow, to likewise freeze the National Endowment for Humanities and the Institute of Museum Services. I would like to bring back to the committee the understanding that this is an economic argument, it is an argument over priorities, it is an argument over the budget, and it is an argument over the deficit.

I serve as the ranking minority member on the Select Education Subcommittee of the Education and Labor Committee, and at a later time this fall, we will continue with a set of hearings and markups to consider the various authorizing kinds of issues that have been raised during this debate.

Mr. Chairman, it is important to understand that the National Endowment for the Arts, under H.R. 3011, would be proposed to be increased by 6.5 percent, the Humanities by 7 percent and the Museum Services by 4.6 percent. This House has frozen at fiscal year 1985 levels program after program. I do understand that there is a difference of freeze in the aggregate versus program by program, but the fact is that the Endowments and Museum Services are separate and identifiable programs, and this House ought to consider whether this is a program, whether these endowments somehow ought to be separated out for increases this large. I think while the committee can obviously recommend it, the House will not choose to make that decision.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. AUCOIN. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

The gentleman makes the point that these are separate agencies. But again, the gentleman has to concede the point that these agencies, along with numerous others, are all subject to the appropriation in the bill before us, and that in the bill before us, the level of appropriation is not frozen at the current-year level but actually is $300 million less than the current-year level. The committee clearly has the right and the duty to make priorities.

Mr. BARTLETT. Reclaiming my time, this Congress then has to decide what the priorities should be and whether, in the face of the reauthorization which has not yet occurred for a multiyear, these three programs, the Arts, Humanities and Museum Services, are somehow deserving of increases this large.

I would like to call to the attention of the committee the CBO Budget analysis of the Unified Budget, which clearly breaks out the Arts, Humanities and Museum Services and demonstrates that at least in their opinion the House-passed Budget resolution contained a freeze amount.

I would also like to call to the committee's attention the recommendation from the National Endowment for the Arts itself. The National Endowment for the Arts, itself, in a letter signed by Frank Hodsoll, the chairman, said, in part:

> I also understand that amendments to this bill are being considered which would bring the Endowment's budget at current level fiscal year 1985 to $163 million, consistent with the House and Senate Budget regulations. I would urge you to accept these amendments. Making this contribution to reducing the Federal budget deficit seems to me reasonable. It will also not interfere with the Endowment's ability to support the arts in this country.

Now, the House should not think that somehow the Endowment for the Arts has been cut year after year. In fact, beginning in 1976, the appropriation was $2.5 million. By 1971, it had increased to $15 million. By 1977, to $94 million. And the current $163 million level of funding in nominal terms is the largest amount every appropriated for the National Endowment for the Arts.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARTLETT. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. AuCOIN. I appreciate the gentleman yielding again. I think it is useful to have exchanges between Members, and I appreciate it in that spirit.

The gentleman, though, repeated his point that the CBO has functional items, categories, and that it is so specific as to enumerate for the purposes of the budget resolution, the endowments. I would have to tell the gentleman that the function under which the endowments fall is the education function. CBO makes approximations as to how the expenditures might fall out, but I think the gentleman would agree that those are not the ceilings, the limits that are imposed by the budget resolution. He is wrong if he believes that.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] is recognized for 5 minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I have discussed the matter with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. REGULA], the ranking minority Member. I have discussed it with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY], and I have discussed it with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY], who has a prospective amendment which he proposed to offer. All of us are in agreement with freezes to be made, with a freeze at last year's level for the National Endowment for the Arts, plus $3 million for the National Endowment for the Arts. There will be amendments offered, as well, to fix the levels for the National Endowment for the Humanities and for the Institute for Museum Services at last year's levels, as well.

Now, I have an amendment that I sent to the desk, which is an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY].

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] yield back the balance of his time?

Mr. YATES. I yield back the balance of my time on my motion for the striking of the requisite number of words.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. YATES TO THE AMENDMENTS OFFERED BY MR. ARMEY

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I offer amendments to the amendments.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

Have we disposed of the Armey amendment as yet? Is the gentleman amending the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not yet put the question on the Armey amendment. The gentleman from Illinois is offering an amendment to the Armey amendment.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ARMEY. It was my understanding that the gentleman from Illinois was going to offer an amendment to my amendment. Is that correct?

Mr. YATES. Correct.

The CHAIRMAN. And that is also the Chair's understanding, if we can just have the amendment read.

The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendments offered by Mr. YATES to the amendments offered by Mr. ARMEY:

Page 61, line 7, strike out "$144,118,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$137,260,000".

Page 61, line 7, strike out "$128,218,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$121,678,000".

Page 61, line 13, strike out "$15,900,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$15,582,000".

Mr. YATES [during the reading]. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, this amendment adds $3 million to the freeze level which was the 1985 level for the National Endowment for the Arts, for the purpose of carrying out an initiative of the committee to provide for greater funding of television and radio broadcasting of the arts on the Public Broadcasting System and National Public Radio, above the programs they have had in the past.

This is in furtherance of the agreement that we have had with the various people I have talked about, and it is my understanding that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY], who has proposed to offer a substitute, will not offer his substitute.

□ 2150

Mr. BARTLETT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, it is my further understanding then that the gentleman from Illinois will be prepared to accept the amendments, the freeze amendments and humanities and museums?

Mr. YATES At 1985 levels.

Mr. BARTLETT. At 1985 levels. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

I only take this small amount of time to point out and make very firm in everybody's mind my concerns, and I felt that this agency could be cut even 10 percent. Even the President's budget is lower than my amendment for cutting 10 percent. So I felt a 10 percent cut was very much in order.

I am not going to offer that amendment because of the agreement reached, but I think that I would like to get into the RECORD a few of my concerns, concerns that we have been promised hearings will be held on these concerns. It is not only the pornography that is on this floor and many Members read that we cannot read over the mike or we cannot read in this chamber or cannot put in the RECORD for obvious reasons. But it is also a grant program by the Design Grants Department that I have a lot of concern with. That grant program gives grants, for instance, a $3,000 grant for a three-part series on the relationships between people and their cars. A $10,000 to research, design and test a new bathtub design. A grant that was given to a person who is not even a United States citizen to study an interreflection light theory and to translate his earlier work into English, amounting to about $10,000. I have $400,000 of those kinds of grants on a list right here. It goes even further than that, where this particular person, a person who received a $10,000 grant to take pictures of amusement parks on the Atlantic coast, received over a 13-year period eight grants from the NEA totaling almost $45,000.

So these are my concerns. These kinds of grants that I have concerns about, not only those but the grants that are awarded for what I consider pornography submitted to the panel at NEA.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DELAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HYDE. I want to commend the gentleman for his initiative. I think it was through his persistence on this issue that we have reached a satisfactory understanding this evening, and I think that you are to be praised for your not letting this issue get swept under the rug. I think it is good to remind the other side that this issue comes up every year, and I hope you do get the hearings that they have promised you on how some of this stuff is selected.

Mr. DELAY. I just want to thank the chairman for working with us and for coming to a satisfactory conclusion.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, when the distinguished chairman of the Interior Subcommittee announced the compromise which includes a freeze on the three items listed, arts, humanities and institute of museums, and an extra amount of $3 million in another account, he did not also include the item that was also agreed to, and that was that I shall not offer my across-the-board cut amendment, which I have already notified all the Members by letter, that I would do. That is part of the agreement and part of my response to the chairman's cooperative attitude on the handling of this matter, and the assurances given to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY] that we will look into the garbage that is apparently being generated in the name of art.

I am pleased to support the chairman, and I congratulate him for having reached this accommodation.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I will only take a few seconds to not let go unchallenged something that has been said on this floor, although not explicitly in debate. That these poems that were handed out were all funded by NEA. They consist of two batches. The first batch of seven poems was not funded by NEA; we have checked this out thoroughly. These were other works by authors who received grants from NEA not funding those poems.

The second batch of four pages was funded by NEA, the second batch was funded, not the first batch, and those were selected out of 2,000 pages of poetry. They found four. They sent three young aids over there to find dirty words and found four pages. The first batch is not NEA.

Mr. YATES. What the gentleman was saying comes from the letter that I received from the Administrator of NEA, Frank Hodsoll. This was a statement that appeared in his letter.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YATES. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DELAY. I thank the gentleman.

I would like to point out to the gentleman how could Hodsoll do that because he does not even have records. Those poems that are in that list, you cannot prove that they saw those poems before they granted it, but you can sure prove that those smut poets that wrote those poems received grants from NEA; we have proven that.

The gentleman did not prove that there was not more poems there because we did not have time to go completely through all the records of NEA. So the gentleman is absolutely wrong. The last poems were read by the panelists and grants were offered. So the gentleman is absolutely wrong and so is Hodsoll.

● Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased that an agreement was reached by which the amendment proposed by Representative DELAY to reduce funding by 10 percent for the National Endowment for the Arts was not offered. That amendment would have constituted congressional censorship, even if the material at issue was in poor taste. While I recognize that some Members of Congress feel that they are on a legislative hot streak after having recently denied blind people access to Playboy magazine, I believe that Congress should exercise great caution in determining the cultural mores for the rest of country.

It would be disturbing, Mr. Chairman, if any Member of Congress could arbitarily determine that poems are unworthy of Federal support and that our Nation's arts agency should be penalized for a few selections if any of us might find unappealing or distasteful.

Mr. Chairman, unlike totalitarian regimes, it has never been part of our Nation's tradition to apply arbitrary standards to suppress or censor the writings of others. Therefore, I am pleased this amendment was dropped and I commend my colleagues for achieving this result.●

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY].

The amendments, to the amendments, were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY], as amended.

The amendments, as amended, were agreed to.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment at the desk which causes a freeze in the humanities. I would ask the Chair if the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois actually covered the National Endowment for the Humanities, or whether it only included the Endowment for the Arts.

Mr. YATES. If the gentleman would yield, it included only the arts.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I would like to move my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

GRANTS AND ADMINISTRATION

For necessary expenses to carry out the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965, as amended, $119,964,000, of which $105,854,000 shall be available to the National Endowment for the Humanities for support of activities in the humanities, pursuant to section 7(c) of the Act, of which not less than 20 per centum shall be available for assistance pursuant to section 7(f) of the Act, and $14,110,000 shall be available for administering the functions of the Act.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FRENZEL

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FRENZEL: National Endowment for the Humanities; Grants and Administration: Page 62, line 8, strike out "$119,964,000, of which $105,854,000", and insert in lieu thereof "$111,599,000, of which $98,929,000", and on page 62, line 13, strike out "$14,110,000", and insert in lieu thereof "$13,120,000".

National Endowment for the Humanities; Matching Grants: Page 62, line 18, strike out "$30,036,000", and insert in lieu thereof "$27,929,000".

Mr. FRENZEL (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I support the Yates compromise to freeze appropriations for the National Endowments for the Arts and Humanities, and the Institute for Museum Services at last year's levels.

This is a reasonable way to settle a controversy about these spending items. Nonetheless, I believe that the committee has not been faithful to the House budget resolution. This appropriation is $140 million over last year's discretionary spending.

So far, for fiscal year 1985, the current year, we have spent more than $19 billion over our first budget resolution. We have even exceed the budget resolution passed July 24, 1 week ago.

Every appropriations bill passed this year was over the freeze levels agreed in the budget resolutions. Nearly every bill, save this one, underfunded the salary account by 5 percent. That alone will put us about $1 billion over our own budget.

In my judgment, there is no merit at all to the claim that the appropriations bring in bills under budget.

In fact, it fully funds, or overfunds, discretionary items and underfunds mandatories and entitlements. The results are that, each year, supplemental appropriations are required. Those supplementals invariably bust the budget.

So much for frugality, now for aesthetics. I like the NEA, and have less affection for NEH. When we thought money was available, I voted for substantial increases in the annual appropriations for each. I believe the Federal Government has a role albeit a limited one, in promoting and encouraging the arts.

But, when this House votes for a freeze in discretionary spending, NEA and NEH ought to be a part of that freeze. The Yates amendments makes them conform to the spirit of our budget, feeble as it is, and I congratulate him for offering it.

I also congratulate the two gentlemen from Texas [Mr. ARMEY and Mr. DELAY] whose diligent work to achieve budget discipline, at least in this limited area, was successful tonight.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

The amendment was agreed to.

□ 2200

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

MATCHING GRANTS

To carry out the provisions of section 10(a)(2) of the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities Act of 1965, as amended, $30,036,000, to remain available until September 30, 1987, of which $18,643,000 shall be available to the National Endowment for the Humanities for the purposes of section 7(h): Provided, That this appropriation shall be available for obligation only in such amounts as may be equal to the total amounts of gifts, bequests, and devises of money, and other property accepted by the Chairman or by grantees of the Endowment under the provisions of subsections 11(a)(2)(B) and 11(a)(3)(B) during the current and preceding fiscal years for which equal amounts have not previously been appropriated.

INSTITUTE OF MUSEUM SERVICES

GRANTS AND ADMINISTRATION

For carrying out title II of the Arts, Humanities, and Cultural Affairs Act of 1976, as amended, $23,220,000: Provided, That none of these funds shall be available for the compensation of Executive Level V or higher positions.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ARMEY

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The amendment would present the agreed upon freeze in Museum Services.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ARMEY: Page 63, line 6, strike out "$23,220,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$21,560,000".

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I will need the time. I think we have reached agreement.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ARMEY. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. YATES. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we accept the amendment.

Mr. ARMEY. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

None of the funds appropriated to the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities may be used to process any grant or contract documents which do not include the text of 18 U.S.C. 1913: Provided, That none of the funds appropriated to the National Foundation on the Arts and the Humanities may be used for official reception and representation expenses.

UNITED STATES HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL COUNCIL

HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL COUNCIL

For expenses of the Holocaust Memorial Council, as authorized by Public Law 96-388, $2,119,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to state that the next title, which is title III of the bill on page 65, will be read by title.

The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 301. The expenditure of any appropriation under this Act for any consulting service through procurement contract, pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 3109, shall be limited to those contracts where such expenditures are a matter of public record and available for public inspection, except where otherwise provided under existing law, or under existing Executive Order issued pursuant to existing law.

SEC. 302. No part of any appropriation under this Act shall be available to the Secretaries of the Interior and Agriculture for use for any sale hereafter made of unprocessed timber from Federal lands west of the 100th meridian in the contiguous 48 States which will be exported from the United States, or which will be used as a substitute for timber from private lands which is exported by the purchaser: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to specific quantities of grades and species of timber which said Secretaries determine are surplus to domestic lumber and plywood manufacturing needs.

SEC. 303. No part of any appropriation under this Act shall be available to the Secretary of the Interior or the Secretary of Agriculture for the leasing of oil and natural gas by noncompetitive bidding on publicly owned lands within the boundaries of the Shawnee National Forest, Illinois: Provided, That nothing herein is intended to inhibit or otherwise affect the sale, lease, or right to access to minerals owned by private individuals.

SEC. 304. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall be available for any activity or the publication or distribution of literature that in any way tends to promote public support or opposition to any legislative proposal on which congressional action is not complete.

SEC. 305. No part of any appropriation contained in this Act shall remain available for obligation beyond the current fiscal year unless expressly so provided herein.

SEC. 306. None of the funds provided in this Act to any department or agency shall be obligated or expended to provide a personal cook, chauffeur, or other personal servants to any officer or employee of such department or agency.

SEC. 307. Except for lands described by sections 105 and 106 of Public Law 96-560, section 103 of Public Law 96-550, and except for land in the State of Alaska, and lands in the national forest system or public lands which have been released for nonwilderness uses by any Act of Congress designating components of the National Wilderness Preservation System now in effect or hereinafter enacted, and except to carry out the obligations and responsibilities of the Secretary of the Interior under section 17(k)(1)(A) and (B) of the Mineral Leasing Act of 1920 (30 U.S.C. 226), none of the funds provided in this Act shall be obligated for any aspect of the processing or issuance of permits or leases pertaining to exploration for or development of coal, oil, gas, oil shale, phosphate, potassium, sulphur, gilsonite, or geothermal resources on Federal lands within any Forest Service RARE II areas recommended for wilderness designation or allocated to further planning in Executive Communication 1504, Ninety-sixth Congress (House Document numbered 96-119); or within any lands designated by Congress as wilderness study areas or within Bureau of Land Management wilderness study areas: Provided, That nothing in this section shall prohibit the expenditure of funds for any aspect of the processing or issuance of permits pertaining to exploration for or development of the mineral resources described in this section, within any component of the National Wilderness Preservation System now in effect or hereinafter enacted, any Forest Service RARE II areas recommended for wilderness designation or allocated to further planning, within any lands designated by Congress as wilderness study areas, or Bureau of Land Management wilderness study areas, under valid existing rights, or leases validly issued in accordance with all applicable Federal, State, and local laws or valid mineral rights in existence prior to October 1, 1982: Provided further, That funds provided in this Act may be used by the Secretary of Agriculture in any area of National Forest lands or the Secretary of the Interior to issue under their existing authority in any area of National Forest or public lands withdrawn pursuant to this Act such permits as may be necessary to conduct prospecting, seismic surveys, and core sampling conducted by helicopter or other means not requiring construction of roads or improvement of existing roads or ways, for the purpose of gathering information about and inventorying energy, mineral, and other resource values of such area, if such activity is carried out in a manner compatible with the preservation of the wilderness environment: Provided further, That seismic activities involving the use of explosives shall not be permitted in designated wilderness areas: Provided further, That funds provided in this Act may be used by the Secretary of the Interior to augment recurring surveys of the mineral values of wilderness areas pursuant to section 4(d)(2) of the Wilderness Act and acquire information on other national forest and public land areas withdrawn pursuant to this Act, by conducting, in conjunction with the Secretary of Energy, the national laboratories, or other Federal agencies, as appropriate, such mineral inventories of areas withdrawn pursuant to this Act as he deems appropriate. These inventories shall be conducted in a manner compatible with the preservation of the wilderness environment through the use of methods including core sampling conducted by helicopter; geophysical techniques such as induced polarization, synthetic aperture radar, magnetic and gravity surveys; geochemical techniques including stream sediment reconnaissance and X-ray diffraction analysis; land satellites; or any other methods he deems appropriate. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to conduct inventories or segments of inventories, such as data analysis activities, by contract with private entities deemed by him to be qualified to engage in such activities whenever he has determined that such contracts would decrease Federal expenditures and would produce comparable or superior results: Provided further, That in carrying out any such inventory or surveys, where National Forest System lands are involved, the Secretary of the Interior shall consult with the Secretary of Agriculture concerning any activities affecting surface resources: Provided further, That funds provided in this Act may be used by the Secretary of the Interior to issue oil and gas leases for the subsurface of any lands designated by Congress as wilderness study areas that are immediately adjacent to producing oil and gas fields or areas that are prospectively valuable. Such leases shall allow no surface occupancy and may be entered only by directional drilling from outside the wilderness study area or other nonsurface disturbing methods.

SEC. 308. None of the funds provided in this Act shall be used to evaluate, consider, process, or award oil, gas, or geothermal leases on Federal lands in the Mount Baker-Snoqualmie National Forest, State of Washington, within the hydrographic boundaries of the Cedar River municipal watershed upstream of river mile 21.6, the Green River municipal watershed upstream of river mile 61.0, the North Fork of the Tolt River proposed municipal watershed upstream of river mile 11.7, and the South Fork Tolt River municipal watershed upstream of river mile 8.4.

SEC. 309. No assessments may be levied against any program, budget activity, subactivity, or project funded by this Act unless such assessments and this basis therefor are presented to the Committees on Appropriations and are approved by such committees.

SEC. 310. Employment funded by this Act shall not be subject to any personnel ceiling or other personnel restriction for permanent or other than permanent employment except as provided by law.

SEC. 311. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, the Secretary of the Interior, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Energy, and the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, are authorized to enter into contracts with State and local governmental entities, including local fire districts, for procurement of services in the presuppression, detection, and suppression of fires on any units within their jurisdiction.

SEC. 312. None of the funds provided by this Act to the United States Fish and Wildlife Service may be obligated or expended to plan for, conduct, or supervise deer hunting on the Loxahatchee National Wildlife Refuge.

SEC. 313. No funds appropriated by this Act shall be available for the implementation or enforcement of any rule or regulation of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, Department of the Interior, requiring the use of steel shot in connection with the hunting of waterfowl in any State of the United States unless the appropriate State regulatory authority approves such implementation.

SEC. 314. None of the funds appropriated by this Act may be used—

(1) to remove wild free-roaming horses and burros from public lands until all wild free-roaming horses and burros so removed previously have been adopted by qualified individuals under section 3(b)(2)(B) of the Act popularly known as the Wild Free-Roaming Horses and Burros Act, enacted December 15, 1971 (16 U.S.C. 1333(b)(2)(B));

(2) to effectuate the sale of wild free-roaming horses and burros, whether at public auction or otherwise, or

(3) to destroy healthy wild free-roaming horses and burros.

SEC. 315. No funds provided by this Act shall be expended to allow an increase in animal unit months above licensed active preference as of October 21, 1976, in wilderness study areas administered by the Bureau of Land Management.

Mr. YATES (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title III be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any points of order against title III?

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against section 314, which appears on page 71, lines 14 through 25, and page 72, lines 1 and 2.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I believe the language of section 314 violates clause 2 of rule XXI in that it is legislation in an appropriation bill and changes existing law by placing new restrictions on the Secretary of the Interior prior to allowing him to round up excess wild horses and burros on the public lands.

The current law mandates alternate disposal of round up animals where they cannot be placed for adoption under the so-called Adopt a Horse Program within a reasonable period of time, and there are court orders enforcing that law.

Section 314(1) would change the current law by prohibiting further roundups until all, and I quote, "all" previously rounded up animals have been adopted by qualified individuals. Not only would this require a determination by the Secretary, but it is quite possible that all the animals now rounded up can never be placed for adoption due to poor condition, physical deformities, ill temper, and so forth.

The language, therefore, creates a new test that also may be impossible to meet.

Subsection 314(3) also prohibits any destruction of "healthy" horses and burros, whatever those may be. Existing law contains no reference or criteria to define what a "healthy" animal is.

Subsection 314(3), therefore, sets up a new test and standard for the disposal of excess horses and burros and would necessitate a new determination by the Secretary as to which horses and burros meet the test and which do not and could, therefore, be destroyed in accordance with existing law.

In short, both of these provisions impose new affirmative duties upon the Secretary of the Interior that are not presently imposed by law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GREEN. I wish to be heard in opposition to the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, the section which is objected to, section 314 of the bill, is a limitation on an appropriation made pursuant to the act popularly known as the Wild Free Roaming Horses and Burros Act, which occurs in 16 United States Code, section 1333, and it is basically because of a problem that has arisen in the enforcement and implementation of that act by the Secretary that this amendment was offered.

The problem is that the act requires that the Secretary first destroy old, sick, or lame animals in the most humane manner possible; second, that as to other animals, he tries to place them for adoption; and third, failing that, he causes additonal excess wild and free-roaming horses and burros for which an adoption demand by qualified individuals does not exist, to be destroyed.

The difficulty is that the Secretary has refused to cause animals to be destroyed, something in which I would encorage him, I might add. For that reason, I offered this amendment in the Appropriations Committee, which essentially seeks to limit the use of the appropriated funds by saying that the Secretary may not use the funds to acquire additional animals by rounding them up until he has disposed of the animals already rounded up, the purpose of that being to avoid creating pressures on the Secretary to destroy animals that he is unable to place.

I would point out to the Chair several things. First, I would suggest to the Chair that my amendment does not impose any new duty on the Secretary to determine what are well animals, because the Secretary is already required by subdivision A of this section to determine what are old, sick, or lame animals, and since "well" is simply an antonym, then in fact no new duty is imposed on the Secretary since, obviously, those animals which are in those categories are the well animals and that determination is one that the Secretary is already making by reason of the charge to him under the authorizing legislation.

The other claim that has been asserted, I think gravamen of that claim is that somehow we are imposing a new duty on the Secretary to try to place animals more rapidly than he has been doing. I would suggest that, as the offeror of this amendment in the committee, that was certainly not my intention and I have no desire to cause the Secretary to move any more rapidly than he is now is. However, I would suggest that the authorizing legislation already requires the Secretary to do every thing he can to cause these animals to be adopted.

Section 1333 specifically states that the actions the Secretary is required to take shall be taken in the following order and priority, and then it goes to list the three actions that may be taken. It is very clear under that language that the duty to place has a higher priority and must be dealt with before the Secretary may move on and destroy any animals. Therefore, the Secretary, under the priorities set forth in the authorizing legislation, is already required to use the maximum effort to place the animals.

Indeed, I would represent to the Chair that I have met with representatives of the Bureau of Land Management very recently and they tell me that they are already under this language moving heaven and Earth to try to place as many animals as they can, so I would suggest to the Chair that in fact the limiting language in the appropriation bill, as amended, strictly follows duties that are already imposed upon the Secretary, the definitions with which the Secretary already must deal under the authorizing legislation, and therefore it is not legislation on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Montana [Mr. MARLENEE] desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the point of order.

I rise in strong support of the gentleman from Ohio, the chairman of the subcommittee which has jurisdiction, along with myself, the ranking minority member that has jurisdiction in the management area in public lands, the management of wild horses and burros.

I wish to point out in my argument how this not only restricts or limits appropriations, but it also places constrictions and restrictions on the Secretary and I will enumerate and outline a number of areas.

We weep for the people of Ethiopia, yet we allow a change in the law that condemns to death by malnutrition and starvation hundreds of wild horses.

We applaud the proper management of grazing levels and land management of public lands and private lands, yet we allow this amendment, which would change existing law and would effectively stop the gathering and controlling of numbers of the so-called wild horses, which in turn could lead to severe overgrazing, the degradation of the environment, to say nothing of condemnation to death by starvation and malnutrition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will restrict his argument to the point of order and not to the merits of the language.

Mr. MARLENEE. Mr. Chairman, the language in the appropriation bill also changes existing law by prohibiting any destruction of healthy horses. Existing law actually mandates that the Secretary dispose of excess horses in "the most humane and cost efficient manner possible."

No one wants to see this happen. In fact, BLM has a moratorium in place. I, personally, support the sale of these excess horses for which no adoption demand exists. You cannot adopt horses which are lame. You cannot adopt horses which are crippled. You cannot get people to adopt horses that are mentally deranged, so we have in confinement a number of horses that are unadoptable and what this law does is prevent unadoption. That is what this change does.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOWLER). The Chair is prepared to rule.

Section 314 of the bill prohibits the use of funds in the bill for the removal of wild free-roaming horses and burros from public lands until all wild free-roaming horses and burros so removed previously have been adopted by qualified individuals pursuant to the adoption provisions in 16 U.S.C. 133(b)(2)(B). Under that subsection of law, and under subparagraph (C) of the same subsection, if the Secretary of the Interior cannot place wild free-roaming horses and burros for adoption by qualified individuals, he may cause additional excess horses and burros for which an adoption demand does not exist to be destroyed in the most humane and cost efficient manner possible.

While it may be true that the intent of the Appropriations Committee in inserting this language into the bill was to effectively cut off funds in the bill for the removal of wild free-roaming horses and burros from public lands, the condition imposed by the committee for the availability of 1986 funds for that purpose goes beyond the alternatives available to the Secretary under existing law. The condition which would permit continued round ups of free-roaming horses and burros with 1986 funds is the placing for adoption for all animals already rounded up, rather than the alternative option of destruction of excess animals where qualified adopters cannot be found. In the opinion of the Chair, the condition imposed upon the availability of funds restricts the discretionary authority available to the Secretary under existing law and constitutes a change in existing law in violation of the rules.

The point of order of the gentleman from Ohio is sustained.

Are there further points of order against this title?

● Mrs. VUCANOVICH. Mr. Chairman, I would today like to address this distinguished body on a matter of great importance to my State and many other Western States.

An estimated 56,000 wild horses and burros roam our public lands. These wild inhabitants of the Western rangelands continue to proliferate further stressing our already overburdened rangelands. Currently the Bureau of Land Management gathers these animals in the hopes of circumventing a potential depletion of the range by multiplying wild herds. To halt or drastically reduce this program at this time would indeed lead to negative consequences including the starvation of the herds.

Wild horse and burro removal efforts included in resource management plans are an integral part of other land actions including adjustments in the number of domestic livestock and wildlife to balance forage use with animal production. Failure to make these adjustments in grazing use would be contrary to the intent of the Federal Land Policy and Management Act of 1976, and would reduce the credibility of the land use planning process. Moreover, if the BLM were to cease its gathering operations, the onslaught of potential litigation could end up costing the taxpayer much more in the long run.

Finally, it must be emphasized that the wild horses and burros represent just one use of the public lands. In considering potential damage to the public land resources, wild horses and burros must be viewed as part of the total multiple-use picture. Given the condition of the range, including drought and near drought conditions in some areas of the pubic lands, allowing the 56,000 animals at the end of fiscal year 1985 to increase unchecked by the 16-percent annual rate of increase may be a questionable stewardship of the rangeland resource.

Thank you Mr. Chairman. I am glad that this point of order raised by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SEIBERLING] was sustained.●

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the ruling of the Chair, I would like to engage in a colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee.

Mr. YATES. I would be delighted to engage in a colloquy with the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, the committee report on the Department of the Interior and related agencies for fiscal year 1986 indicates a net increase of $1.38 million for the Wild Horse and Burro Program. At the same time, however, the committee also recommends a decrease of $1 million. Could the chairman enlighten us as to what was the intention in eliminating this $1 million?

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN. I am happy to yield to the distinguished chairman.

Mr. YATES. Well, our intention was to eliminate this amount from funds which had been requested to remove wild horses and burros from the range in fiscal year 1986. We also recommended $2.38 million to feed wild horses and burros taken off the range in fiscal year 1985.

Mr. GREEN. So, Mr. Chairman, am I correct in my understanding then that it is the intent of this committee, as stated in the report, that the funds appropriated to the Bureau of Land Management for this program will be used to feed the horses rounded up in fiscal year 1985 and that no funds will be used to round up horses in fiscal year 1986?

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman, that is the intention of the committee.

Mr. GREEN. I thank the distinguished chairman.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, has the Committee completed consideration of this title?

The CHAIRMAN. No. Are there further amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. CONTE

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CONTE: On page 72, after line 7, add a new section as follows:

SEC. . Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, the amount appropriated by this Act for the Clean Coal Technology Reserve is hereby reduced by $400,000,000; the amount available beginning October 1, 1986, is hereby reduced by $200,000,000; and the amount available beginning October 1, 1987, is hereby reduced by $200,000,000.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the grounds that this is a matter previously considered by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. YATES] reserves a point of order.

Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CONTE. On the point of order, Mr. Chairman? The gentleman has reserved a point of order.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, let me make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, this is a subject that has already been considered and disposed of by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment should be held in order on its face. The amendment applies only to this bill and does not directly or indirectly change existing law. The reduction is made immediately by the amendment. Since the amendment does not change existing law, it does not fall within the general prohibition against provisions changing existing law in clause (b) of rule XXI.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, if I may be heard, that is not the point of order I made.

The only point of order I made was that this matter has already been considered by the House an hour ago. It has already been disposed of. I think for that reason it is a repetition that is not appropriate under the rules.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment does not amend any previous law, and since the amendment does not change existing law, it is not a retrenchment within the meaning of clause (b) and clause (d) of rule XXI.

Clearly the amendment is not a limitation. Therefore, the amendment is in order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. FOWLER). In the opinion of the Chair, the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts is germane to title 31—general provisions—which contains several restrictions on funds in the bill. It does not specifically amend any other part of the bill already amended and is merely separate language inserted in the bill.

The point of order is overruled.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I will not take the 5 minutes. The hour is late. We have debated this issue.

There are many on this side, for the information of my good friend, the majority leader, who felt they wanted a rollcall on this particular issue and I think they should be given that opportunity. It is the same amendment.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, then may I suggest that we come to a vote on it.

Mr. CONTE. Of course.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, may this be put to a vote?

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I will not take the 5 minutes. I just want to point out that a vote "no" on this amendment is a vote for clean air, for the clean coal program, for the environment, and for the reduction of acid rain.

□ 2220

We have been over those arguments, but just because there is some confusion, a vote "no" on this amendment will preserve the $500 million program that we approved about an hour ago to do the clean coal technology.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Chairman, I do not see the amendment that way. I view the amendment as bringing the funding for this program down to what the funding had been before with $100 million.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, what the amendment does is provide for $100 million for research and development for clean coal for the first year, but does not go along with the 1987 $200 million that you have, and the $200 million for 1988.

Mr. REGULA. That is correct.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SHARP. If I understand correctly, a "no" vote is a support for the Regula amendment, which many, many people on the House floor spoke for earlier.

Mr. REGULA. That is correct.

Mr. SHARP. So if they wish to support the Regula position, they now vote "no."

Mr. REGULA. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE].

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic devise, and there were—ayes 98, noes 317, not voting 18, as follows:

Mr. EMERSON changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

□ 2240

Accordingly the Committee rose and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BROWN of California) having assumed the chair, Mr. FOWLER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3011) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Hawkins of California for, with Mr. Donnelly against.

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZING THE CLERK TO MAKE TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 3011

Mr. YATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill (H.R. 3011) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for other purposes, the Clerk shall be authorized to make any necessary technical corrections.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DOWDY of Mississippi). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

PRODUCTIVITY IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 99-91)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, without objection, referred to the Committee on Government Operations and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress of the United States:

We share a common objective—to make government more responsive and sensitive to the needs of the people. Over the past several years, significant progress has been made toward:

—Controlling the growth of government by selectively limiting funding through the budget process and by controlling personnel levels;

—Identifying and preventing waste and fraud in government spending;

—Improving individual agency management, to further reduce costs and make better use of its resources;

—Developing government-wide management systems that can be adapted to the needs of each agency; and —Improving agency delivery systems to ensure that services are efficiently delivered to the American people.

Throughout this effort, I have sought the advice and counsel of the private sector. The President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control conducted systematic studies of agencies to determine more effective and efficient approaches to delivering services to the public. Thousands of recommendations were made and a large number have been and are being implemented.

The Congress has also supported our efforts by giving the Executive branch important tools to improve efficiency, including milestone legislation such as the Paperwork Reduction Act, the Congressional Reports Elimination Act, the Prompt Payment Act, the Debt Collection Act, and the Deficit Reduction Act.

Today, I am requesting your further assistance to build on this foundation of progress through your continued support of our efforts to improve government performance. I am also asking you to pass a joint resolution establishing productivity improvement as a national goal and to enact management legislation that is critical to further improving the government's operations and reducing its costs. Together we can enhance our government's ability to use business-like procedures, providing the public with higher quality and more timely services at a lower cost—an objective shared by the Congress and the Executive branch.

THE PRODUCTIVITY IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

The need for and importance of improving the efficiency with which the Federal government delivers goods and services to the American public cannot be overstated. The Federal government now accounts for 24.6% of the GNP. If we pattern our productivity efforts after those which have proven the most productive in the private sector, it is reasonable to expect that we could match or exceed the private sector's gains, which have recently climbed to about 3% per year.

Therefore, I will shortly establish a government-wide program to improve productivity 20% by 1992. Each agency will be called upon to establish specific priorities for improvement of their services, to examine each of their functions, and to achieve agency-wide productivity goals. They will be asked to focus on results, rather than on process. Agencies will be asked to draw upon the creativity and ingenuity of all employees, to properly reward any achievements in productivity improvement, and to minimize any negative impact productivity increases might have on their employees. This management approach is standard in the private sector and we plan to make it standard in the Federal government.

The President's Management Improvement Program: Reform '88 has provided a solid foundation upon which to base this productivity improvement program, as great strides have been made in establishing effective cash and credit management programs, improving agency management systems, lowering administrative costs, and reducing waste and fraud. Some of our Federal agencies have already demonstrated that they can make real improvements in productivity when they commit their time and talent.

The success of this effort will be reinforced by an early expression of Congressional resolve to make productivity improvement a national goal. Each department and agency will report to me through the Office of Management and Budget on their productivity goals, and on both the progress and the problems in accomplishing them. On the basis of that report, our annual management report to the Congress, which is part of the budget, will also describe our efforts to achieve productivity improvements.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S MANAGEMENT LEGISLATION INITIATIVES

The Congress has been most helpful in passing legislation that has made management reform possible. To further assure successful implementation of our Management Improvement Program: Reform '88, I have directed the Office of Management and Budget and agencies to transmit legislative proposals which would make it possible to improve substantially the effectiveness of the Executive branch. These management legislative initiatives cover the important areas of fraud prevention, payment integrity and simplification, procurement, reorganization authority, and reduction in regulatory and paperwork burdens. Some of these proposals have already been sent to the Congress, and others will be transmitted in the days ahead. I want to stress that each of these proposals plays an important role in improving government's management, reducing fraud and waste, or improving productivity. I hope that the Congress can enact them promptly.

CONCLUSION

Now is the time for us to redouble our efforts to improve the operations of government. The budget deficit, the need to make programs more responsive to their beneficiaries, the complexity of the problems we face, and the very size of government itself all require us to apply the best methods and procedures available to improve productivity. Enactment of the various legislative proposals outlined here will enable us to continue and strengthen our joint effort to improve government management.

Federal managers want to do a good job. Given the necessary tools and support, they can do so. Passage of these proposals will demonstrate our commitment to increased productivity and improved management practices in the Federal government. The American people want and deserve a Federal government that is fair, efficient, effective, and, above all, productive.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, July 31, 1985.

NURSE EDUCATION ACT OF 1985

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 2370) entitled "An act to amend the Public Health Service Act to extend the programs of assistance for nurse education," with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this Act may be cited as the "Nurse Education Amendments of 1985".

REFERENCE

SEC. 2. Except as otherwise specifically provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or a repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Public Health Service Act.

SPECIAL PROJECTS

SEC. 3. (a) Section 820(a) is amended—

(1) by striking out "or" after the semicolon in paragraph (4);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (5) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following:

"(6) demonstrate clinical nurse education programs which combine educational curricula and clinical practice in health care delivery organizations, including acute care facilities, long-term care facilities, and ambulatory care facilities;

"(7) demonstrate methods to improve access to nursing services in noninstitutional settings through support of nursing practice arrangements in communities; or

"(8) demonstrate methods to encourage nursing graduates to practice in health manpower shortage areas (designated under section 332) in order to improve the specialty and geographical distribution of nurses in the United States.".

(b) Section 820(d) is amended—

(1) by striking out the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof: "(1) For payments under grants and contracts under paragraphs (1) through (5) of subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated $9,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $9,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $9,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988.";

(2) by striking out "this subsection" in the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "this paragraph";

(3) by striking out "1981," in such sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "1985,"; and

(4) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) For payments under grants and contracts under paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) of subsection (a), there are authorized to be appropriated $2,700,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $2,700,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $2,700,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988. In making grants and entering into contracts with amounts appropriated under this paragraph, the Secretary shall give priority to applications for grants and contracts under paragraph (7) of subsection (a).".

ADVANCED NURSE EDUCATION

SEC. 4. Section 821 is amended to read as follows:

"ADVANCED NURSE EDUCATION

"SEC. 821. (a) The Secretary may make grants to and enter into contracts with public and private nonprofit collegiate schools of nursing to meet the costs of projects to—

"(1) plan, develop, and operate,

"(2) expand, or

"(3) maintain, programs which lead to masters' and doctoral degrees and which prepare nurses to serve as nurse educators, administrators, or researchers or to serve in clinical nurse specialties determined by the Secretary to require advanced education.

"(b) For payments under grants and contracts under this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $16,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $17,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $17,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988.".

NURSE PRACTITIONER AND NURSE MIDWIFE PROGRAMS

SEC. 5. (a)(1) Paragraph (1) of section 822(a) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) The Secretary may make grants to and enter into contracts with public or nonprofit private schools of nursing and public health, public or nonprofit private schools of medicine which received grants or contracts under this subsection prior to October 1, 1985, public or nonprofit private hospitals, and other public or nonprofit private entities to meet the cost of projects to—

"(A) plan, develop, and operate,

"(B) expand, or

"(C) maintain, programs for the education of nurse practitioners and nurse midwives. The Secretary shall give special consideration to applications for grants or contracts for programs for the education of nurse practitioners and nurse midwives who will practice in health manpower shortage areas (designated under section 332) and for the education of nurse practitioners which emphasize education respecting the special problems of geriatric patients and education to meet the particular needs of nursing home patients and patients who are confined to their homes.".

(2) Paragraph (2) of such section is amended—

(A) by striking out subparagraph (A) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(A) For purposes of this section, the term 'programs for the education of nurse practitioners and nurse midwives' means educational programs for registered nurses (irrespective of the type of school of nursing in which the nurses received their training) which meet guidelines prescribed by the Secretary in accordance with subparagraph (B) and which have as their objective the education of nurses (including pediatric and geriatric nurses) who will, upon completion of their studies in such programs, be qualified to effectively provide primary health care, including primary health care in homes and in ambulatory care facilities, long-term care facilities (where appropriate), and other health care institutions.";

(B) by striking out "training" in the first sentence of subparagraph (B) and inserting in lieu thereof "education"; and

(C) by inserting "and nurse midwives" before the period in the first sentence of subparagraph (B).

(b) Section 822(b) is amended—

(1) by striking out "nursing, medicine, and public health," in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "nursing and public health, schools of medicine which received grants or contracts under this subsection prior to October 1, 1985,";

(2) by inserting "and nurse midwives" before the period in the first sentence of paragraph (1);

(3) by inserting "or nurse midwife" after "practitioner" in paragraph (3); and

(4) by inserting "or in a public health care facility" before "for a period" in paragraph (3).

(c) Section 822(c) is amended—

(1) by striking out "training" and inserting in lieu thereof "education"; and

(2) by inserting "and nurse midwives" after "nurse practitioners".

(d) Section 822 is further amended by striking out subsection (d) and by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (d).

(e) Section 822(d) (as redesignated by subsection (d) of this section) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) For payments under grants and contracts under this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $12,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $12,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $12,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988.".

(f) The heading for section 822 is amended to read as follows:

"NURSE PRACTITIONER AND NURSE MIDWIFE PROGRAMS".

TRAINEESHIPS FOR ADVANCED EDUCATION OF PROFESSIONAL NURSES

SEC. 6. (a) Paragraph (1) of section 830(a) is amended to read as follows:

"(1)(A) The Secretary may make grants to public or nonprofit private schools of nursing and public health, public or nonprofit private hospitals, and other public or nonprofit private entities to cover the cost of traineeships for nurses in masters' degree and doctoral degree programs in order to educate such nurses to—

"(i) serve in and prepare for practice as nurse practitioners,

"(ii) serve in and prepare for practice as nurse administrators, nurse educators, and nurse researchers, or

"(iii) serve in and prepare for practice in other professional nursing specialties determined by the Secretary to require advanced education.

"(B) The Secretary may make grants to public and private nonprofit schools of nursing and appropriate public and private nonprofit entities to cover the cost of traineeships to educate nurses to serve in and prepare for practice as nurse midwives.".

(b) Section 830 is further amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c);

(2) by striking out the first sentence of such subsection and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(1) There are authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of subsection (a) $11,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $12,250,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $13,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988.";

(3) by striking out the second sentence of such subsection;

(4) by striking out "subsection (a)(1)(C)" in the third sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (a)(1)(A)(i)";

(5) by adding at the end of such subsection the following new paragraph:

"(2) There are authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of subsection (b) $1,100,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $1,100,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $1,100,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988.";

(6) by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary may make grants to public or private nonprofit schools of nursing to cover the costs of post-baccalaureate fellowships for faculty in such schools to enable such faculty to—

"(1) investigate cost-effective alternatives to traditional health care modalities, with special attention to the needs of at-risk populations, such as the elderly, premature infants, physically and mentally disabled individuals, and ethnic and minority groups;

"(2) examine nursing interventions that result in positive outcomes in health status, with attention to interventions which address family violence, drug and alcohol abuse, the health of women, adolescent care, and disease prevention; and

"(3) address other areas of nursing practice considered by the Secretary to require additional study."; and

(7) by striking out "TRAINING" in the section heading and inserting in lieu thereof "EDUCATION".

NURSE ANESTHETISTS

SEC. 7. (a) Section 831(a)(1) is amended by striking out "Commissioner" and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary".

(b) Section 831 is further amended by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c) and by inserting after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) The Secretary may make grants to public or private nonprofit institutions to cover the cost of projects to improve existing programs for the education of nurse anesthetists which are accredited by an entity or entities designated by the Secretary of Education. Such grants shall include grants to such institutions for the purpose of providing financial assistance and support to certified registered nurse anesthetists who are faculty members of accredited programs to enable such nurse anesthetists to obtain advanced education relevant to their teaching functions.".

(c) Section 831(c) (as redesignated by subsection (b) of this section) is amended to read as follows:

"(c) For the purpose of making grants under this section, there are authorized to be appropriated $800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, $800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and $800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988. Not more than 20 percent of the amount appropriated under this section for any fiscal year shall be obligated for grants under the second sentence of subsection (b).".

(d) The section heading for such section is amended by striking out "TRAINEESHIPS FOR TRAINING OF".

STUDENT LOANS

SEC. 8. (a) Section 835 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) Any standard established by the Secretary by regulation for the collection by schools of nursing of loans made pursuant to loan agreements under this subpart shall provide that the failure of any such school to collect such loans shall be measured in accordance with this subsection.

"(2) The measurement of a school's failure to collect loans made under this subpart shall be the ratio (stated as a percentage) that the defaulted principal amount outstanding of such school bears to the matured loans of such school.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) the term 'default' means the failure of a borrower of a loan made under this subpart to—

"(i) make an installment payment when due; or

"(ii) comply with any other term of the promissory note for such loan, except that a loan made under this subpart shall not be considered to be in default if the loan is discharged in bankruptcy or if the school reasonably concludes from written contacts with the borrower that the borrower intends to repay the loan;

"(B) the term 'defaulted principal amount outstanding' means the total amount borrowed from the loan fund of a school that has reached the repayment stage (minus any principal amount repaid or cancelled) on loans—

"(i) repayable monthly and in default for at least 120 days; and

"(ii) repayable less frequently than monthly and in default for at least 180 days;

"(C) the term 'grace period' means the period of one year beginning on—

"(i) the date on which the borrower ceases to pursue a full-time or half-time course of study at a school of nursing; or

"(ii) the date on which ends any period described in clause (A) or (B) of section 836(b)(2) which is applicable to such borrower, whichever is later; and

"(D) the term 'matured loans' means the total principal amount of all loans made by a school of nursing under this subpart minus the total principal amount of loans made by such school to students who are—

"(i) enrolled in a full-time or half-time course of study at such school; or

"(ii) in their first grace period.".

(b) Section 836(b)(1) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" before "(B)"; and

(2) by inserting before the period a comma and "and (C) if a student who will enroll in the school after June 30, 1986, is of exceptional financial need (as defined by regulations of the Secretary)".

(c) Section 836(f) is amended—

(1) by inserting "and in accordance with this section" after "Secretary" in the first sentence;

(2) by striking out "may" in such sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "shall"; and

(3) by striking out the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "No such charge may be made if the payment of such installment or the filing of such evidence is made within 60 days after the date on which such installment or filing is due. The amount of any such charge may not exceed an amount equal to 6 percent of the amount of such installment.".

(d) Section 836 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) The Secretary is authorized to attempt to collect any loan which was made under this subpart, which is in default, and which was referred to the Secretary by a school of nursing with which the Secretary has an agreement under this subpart, on behalf of that school under such terms and conditions as the Secretary may prescribe (including reimbursement from the school's student loan fund for expenses the Secretary may reasonably incur in attempting collection), but only if the school has complied with such requirements as the Secretary may specify by regulation with respect to the collection of loans under this subpart. A loan so referred shall be treated as a debt subject to section 5514 of title 5, United States Code. Amounts collected shall be deposited in the school's student loan fund. Whenever the Secretary desires the institution of a civil action regarding any such loan, the Secretary shall refer the matter to the Attorney General for appropriate action.".

(e) Section 838 is amended by striking out subsections (a) and (b) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(a)(1) The Secretary shall from time to time set dates by which schools of nursing must file applications for Federal capital contributions.

"(2)(A) If the total of the amounts requested for any fiscal year in such applications exceeds the total amount appropriated under section 837 for that fiscal year, the allotment from such total amount to the loan fund of each school of nursing shall be reduced to whichever of the following is the smaller:

"(i) The amount requested in its application.

"(ii) An amount which bears the same ratio to the total amount appropriated as the number of students estimated by the Secretary to be enrolled on a full-time basis in such school during such fiscal year bears to the estimated total number of students enrolled in all such schools on a full-time basis during such year.

"(B) Amounts remaining after allotment under subparagraph (A) shall be reallotted in accordance with clause (ii) of such subparagraph among schools whose applications requested more than the amounts so allotted to their loan funds, but with such adjustments as may be necessary to prevent the total allotted to any such school's loan fund under this paragraph and paragraph (3) from exceeding the total so requested by it.

"(3) Funds which, pursuant to section 839(c) or pursuant to a loan agreement under section 835, are returned to the Secretary in any fiscal year, shall be available for allotment in such fiscal year and in the fiscal year succeeding the fiscal year. Funds described in the preceding sentence shall be allotted among schools of nursing in such manner as the Secretary determines will best carry out this subpart, except that in making such allotments, the Secretary shall give priority to schools of nursing which established student loan funds under this subpart after September 30, 1975.

"(b) Allotments to a loan fund of a school shall be paid to it from time to time in such installments as the Secretary determines will not result in unnecessary accumulations in the loan fund at such school.".

(f) Section 839 is amended—

(1) by striking out "1987," each place it appears in subsections (a) and (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "1991,"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c)(1) Within 90 days after the termination of any agreement with a school under section 835 or the termination in any other manner of a school's participation in the loan program under this subpart, such school shall pay to the Secretary from the balance of the loan fund of such school established under section 835, an amount which bears the same ratio to the balance in such fund on the date of such termination as the total amount of the Federal capital contributions to such fund by the Secretary pursuant to section 835(b)(2)(A) bears to the total amount in such fund on such date derived from such Federal capital contributions and from funds deposited in the fund pursuant to section 835(b)(2)(B). The remainder of such balance shall be paid to the school.

"(2) A school to which paragraph (1) applies shall pay to the Secretary after the date on which payment is made under such paragraph and not less than quarterly, the same proportionate share of amounts received by the school after the date of termination referred to in paragraph (1) in payment of principal or interest on loans made from the loan fund as was determined for the Secretary under such paragraph.".

(g) Subpart II of part B of title VIII is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"PROCEDURES FOR APPEAL OF TERMINATIONS

"SEC. 842. In any case in which the Secretary intends to terminate an agreement with a school of nursing under this subpart, the Secretary shall provide the school with a written notice specifying such intention and stating that the school may request a formal hearing with respect to such termination. If the school requests such a hearing within 30 days after the receipt of such notice, the Secretary shall provide such school with a hearing conducted by an administrative law judge.".

(h) Section 6103(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended—

(1) by inserting "ADMINISTERED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION" before the period in the paragraph heading of paragraph (4); and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(5) INDIVIDUALS WHO HAVE DEFAULTED ON STUDENT LOANS ADMINISTERED BY THE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Upon written request by the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the Secretary may disclose the mailing address of any taxpayer who has defaulted on a loan made under part C of title VII of the Public Health Service Act or under subpart II of part B of title VIII of such Act, for use only by officers, employees, or agents of the Department of Health and Human Services for purposes of locating such taxpayer for purposes of collecting such loan.

"(B) DISCLOSURE TO SCHOOLS AND ELIGIBLE LENDERS.—Any mailing address disclosed under subparagraph (A) may be disclosed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services to—

"(i) any school with which the Secretary of Health and Human Services has an agreement under subpart II of part C of title VII of the Public Health Service Act or subpart II of part B of title VIII of such Act, or

"(ii) any eligible lender (within the meaning of section 737(4) of such Act) participating under subpart I of part C of title VII of such Act, for use only by officers, employees, or agents of such school or eligible lender whose duties relate to the collection of student loans for purposes of locating individuals who have defaulted on student loans made under such subparts for the purposes of collecting such loans.".

REPEALS

SEC. 9. (a)(1) Sections 801, 802, 803, 805, 810, 811, 815, and 841 are repealed.

(2) Subpart III of part B of title VIII is repealed.

(b)(1) Part A of title VIII is amended by striking out the headings for subparts I, II, III, and IV.

(2) The heading for part A of the title VIII is amended to read as follows:

"PART A—SPECIAL PROJECTS".

(3) The heading for title VIII is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE VIII—NURSE EDUCATION".

(c)(1) Section 804 is redesignated as section 858 and is amended to read as follows:

"RECOVERY FOR CONSTRUCTION ASSISTANCE

"SEC. 858. (a) If at any time within twenty years (or within such shorter period as the Secretary may prescribe by regulation for an interim facility) after the completion of construction of a facility with respect to which funds have been paid under subpart I of part A (as such subpart was in effect on September 30, 1985)—

"(1) the owner of the facility ceases to be a public or nonprofit school,

"(2) the facility ceases to be used for the training purposes for which it was constructed, or

"(3) the facility is used for sectarian instruction or as a place for religious worship, the United States shall be entitled to recover from the owner of the facility the base amount prescribed by subsection (c)(1) plus the interest (if any) prescribed by subsection (c)(2).

"(b) The owner of a facility which ceases to be a public or nonprofit school as described in paragraph (1) of subsection (a), or the owner of a facility the use of which changes as described in paragraph (2) or (3) of such subsection shall provide the Secretary written notice of such cessation or change of use not later than 10 days after the date on which such cessation or change of use occurs.

"(c)(1) The base amount that the United States is entitled to recover under subsection (a) is the amount bearing the same ratio to the then value (as determined by the agreement of the parties or in an action brought in the district court of the United States for the district in which the facility is situated) of the facility as the amount of the Federal participation bore to the cost of the construction.

"(2)(A) The interest that the United States is entitled to recover under subsection (a) is the interest for the period (if any) described in subparagraph (B) at a rate (determined by the Secretary) based on the average of the bond equivalent rates of ninety-one-day Treasury bills auctioned during such period.

"(B) The period referred to in subparagraph (A) is the period beginning—

"(1) if notice is provided as prescribed by subsection (b), 191 days after the date on which the owner of the facility ceases to be a public or nonprofit school as described in paragraph (1) of subsection (a), or 191 days after the date on which the use of the facility changes as described in paragraph (2) or (3) of such subsection, or

"(ii) if notice is not provided as prescribed by subsection (b), 11 days after the date on which such cessation or change of use occurs, and ending on the date the amount the United States is entitled to recover is collected.

"(d) The Secretary may waive the recovery rights of the United States under subsection (a) with respect to a facility (under such conditions as the Secretary may establish by regulation) if the Secretary determines that there is good cause for waiving such rights.

"(e) The right of recovery of the United States under subsection (a) shall not, prior to judgment, constitute a lien on any facility.".

(2) In the case of any facility that was or is constructed on or before the date of enactment of this Act or within 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the period described in subsection (c)(2)(B)(i) of section 858 of the Public Health Service Act (as amended by paragraph (1) of this subsection) shall begin no earlier than 181 days after the date of enactment of this Act.

(3) The amendments made by paragraph (1) of this subsection shall not adversely affect other legal rights of the United States.

(d) Section 851(b) is amended by striking out ", and in the review of applications for construction projects under subpart I of part A, of applications under section 805, and of applications under subpart III of part A".

(e) Section 853(1) is amended by striking out "the Canal Zone," and inserting in lieu thereof "the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands,".

(f) Section 853(6) is amended to read as follows:

"(6) The term 'accredited' when applied to any program of nurse education means a program accredited by a recognized body or bodies, or by a State agency, approved for such purpose by the Secretary of Education and when applied to a hospital, school, college, or university (or a unit thereof) means a hospital, school, college, or university (or a unit thereof) which is accredited by a recognized body or bodies, or by a State agency, approved for such purpose by the Secretary of Education, except that a school of nursing seeking an agreement under subpart II of part B for the establishment of a student loan fund, which is not, at the time of the application under such subpart, eligible for accreditation by such a recognized body or bodies or State agency, shall be deemed accredited for purposes of such subpart if the Secretary of Education finds, after consultation with the appropriate accreditation body or bodies, that there is reasonable assurance that the school will meet the accreditation standards of such body or bodies prior to the beginning of the academic year following the normal graduation date of students who are in their first year of instruction at such school during the fiscal year in which the agreement with such school is made under such subpart; except that the provisions of this clause shall not apply for purposes of section 838. For the purpose of this paragraph, the Secretary of Education shall publish a list of recognized accrediting bodies, and of State agencies, which the Secretary of Education determines to be reliable authority as to the quality of education offered.".

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 10. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), this Act and the amendments and repeals made by this Act shall take effect on October 1, 1985.

(b)(1) The provisions of section 9(c) of this Act and the amendment made by paragraph (1) of such section shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) The amendment made by section 8(a) of this Act shall take effect June 30, 1984.

ROTATION OF LABEL STATEMENTS

SEC. 11. LABEL ROTATION.—Section 4(c) of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act (15 U.S.C. 1333(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "The label" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the label"; and

(2) by inserting at the end the following:

"(2)(A) A manufacturer or importer of cigarettes may apply to the Federal Trade Commission to have the label rotation described in subparagraph (C) apply with respect to a brand of cigarettes manufactured or imported by such manufacturer or importer if—

"(i) the number of cigarettes of such brand style sold in the fiscal year of the manufacturer or importer preceding the submission of the application is less than one-fourth of one percent of all the cigarettes sold in the United States in such year, and

"(ii) more than one-half of the cigarettes manufactured or imported by such manufacturer or importer for sale in the United States are packaged into brand styles which meet the requirements of clause (i).

If an application is approved by the Commission, the label rotation described in subparagraph (C) shall apply with respect to the applicant during the one-year period beginning on the date of the application approval.

"(B) An applicant under subparagraph (A) shall include in its application a plan under which the label statements specified in paragraph (1) of subsection (a) will be rotated by the applicant manufacturer or importer in accordance with the label rotation described in subparagraph (C).

"(C) Under the label rotation which a manufacturer or importer with an approved application may put into effect each of the labels specified in paragraph (1) of subsection (a) shall appear on the packages of each brand style of cigarettes with respect to which the application was approved an equal number of times within the twelvemonth period beginning on the date of the approval by the Commission of the application.".

(b) DEFINITION.—Section 3 of such Act (15 U.S.C. 1332) is amended by redesignating paragraph (8) as paragraph (9) and by inserting after paragraph (7) the following:

"(8) The term 'brand style' means a variety of cigarettes distinguished by the tobacco used, tar and nicotine content, flavoring used, size of the cigarette, filtration on the cigarette, or packaging.".

(C) EFFECTIVE DATE.—

(1) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall take effect October 12, 1985, except that—

(A) on and after the date of the enactment of this Act a manufacturer or importer of cigarettes may apply to the Federal Trade Commission to have the label rotation specified in section 4(c)(2) of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, as amended by subsection (a), apply to its brand styles of cigarettes and the Commission may take action on such an application, and

(B) a manufacturer or importer of cigarettes may elect to have the amendments apply at an earlier date or dates selected by the manufacturer or importer.

(2) The Federal Trade Commission may, upon application of a manufacturer or importer of cigarettes with an approved application under section 4(c)(2) of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, as amended by subsection (a), extend the effective date specified in paragraph (1) to January 11, 1986. The Commission may approve an application for such an extension only if the Commission determines that the effective date specified in such paragraph (1) would cause unreasonable economic hardship to the applicant. Section 4 of the Federal Cigarette Labeling and Advertising Act, as in effect before October 12, 1985, shall apply with respect to a manufacturer or importer with an application approved under this paragraph.

TECHNICAL AMENDMENT

SEC. 12. Section 8 of such Act (15 U.S.C. 1336) is amended by striking out "4(b)" and inserting in lieu thereof "4".

REPORT DATE

SEC. 13. Section 3(c) of the Comprehensive Smoking Education Act (15 U.S.C. 1341(c)) is amended by striking out "1985" and inserting in lieu thereof "1986".

Mr. BROYHILL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of making sure that the Members know what is taking place here.

□ 2300

I yield to the gentleman and would be delighted to help in the explanation.

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

The legislation is first of all the bill that passed the House, and the Senate added an amendment to it which we have no objection to. The bill is on nurse education. One of the amendments on that bill would deal with the labeling on tobacco products which deals with a problem that some of the tobacco companies have had in meeting the requirement of the legislation adopted last year.

Mr. BROYHILL. The gentleman has correctly stated what is in this Senate-passed bill. It is 3-year authorization of the Nurse Education Program which has had overwhelming support in this body for many years. This bill that has come to us from the Senate is very similar to the same one that we have been considering in the committee, and for whatever reasons, one of the Members of the other body have attached to it a bill that is an amendment to the tobacco warning labels that are required to go on the side panels of packages of cigarettes. Some of the smaller companies must have relief by the deadline of October 1, or they tell us that they cannot comply.

It is for this reason that we are urging that this bill pass now rather than have to wait until regular consideration of the bill from our committee, which could occur who knows when. That is why I am urging that we go ahead and take the Senate-passed bill, even though it has this odd amendment on it, and send it to the President for his signature.

I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding under his reservation.

It is my understanding that the bill we have before us does come to us at a figure that is higher than the administration originally requested for this program, and that when this bill was on the floor, because of the nature of the funding levels in it, that the administration had opposed the bill. I am somewhat reluctant to see a bill pass under a unanimous-consent procedure that has that kind of budgetary problem in it.

Can the gentleman give me some assurance that those problems have been corrected?

Mr. BROYHILL. This bill is an authorization bill; it is not an appropriation bill. I think the total 3-year figures are somewhere in the neighborhood of about $7 million over the President's budget or the budgetary figures.

However, it is my understanding that the appropriation figures are in line with the figures that the gentleman would be more comfortable with. Now, the gentleman from California may want to confirm what I have said or correct it.

Mr. WAXMAN. I think the gentleman has stated the situation correctly to my information as well.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would yield further, do we have an indication whether or not the administration is in favor of us taking this action by unanimous consent here this evening?

Mr. BROYHILL. I have not had any contact with the administration with respect to this bill. I have not had much contact with the administration with respect to many bills from committee, I hate to tell the gentleman. I am flying solo on a lot of the legislation that comes before my committee. We do not have timely information oftentimes from the administration with respect to what they want on this legislation so we have to use our own judgment. In this particular case, we are faced with some October 1 deadlines that are of considerable concern to a number of people and an important industry to my State. So for that reason, I am asking the gentleman from California to expedite consideration of this legislation at this hour.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would yield further, I guess my problem is that I am a little bit concerned about bringing things up here late at night, where we do not have very much information, where we do not have the administration's position on it. I understand the gentleman's problem in getting that kind of information, but we really are in a position of acting blindly on something that as I recall when it went through here did have some budgetary problems, and I am just trying to figure out why, for instance we could not use——

Mr. BROYHILL. You are talking about the bill from last year. Is that the one you are talking about? The one from the last Congress?

Mr. WALKER. It was my understanding when we passed the bill out of the House this year that in fact there was administration opposition because it was over their budget. My understanding is that those levels have not been reduced.

Mr. BROYHILL. This bill is different than the one that passed last year.

I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. This certainly is a different bill than last year, and we hope to have the administration approval. We are looking at amendments that have been offered by Senator HATCH and his committee and offered by the Senate. They are amendments that are agreeable with me. I suppose we will know the definitive administration position as soon as this bill reaches the White House. They will have the decision at that point whether to sign or veto it. I suspect they will sign it.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROYHILL. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. When this bill came before the Energy and Commerce Committee the administration did oppose it because they wanted to cut back on the nurses' training, and they also, when this bill came to the floor by suspension, they did suggest they were opposed to it and would seek changes in the Senate. They sought those changes in the Senate but they did not get them in the Senate, and in fact the Senate came back with the same numbers that we had, is that correct? The numbers in the Senate are the same as what we sent them, are they not?

Mr. WAXMAN. I do not believe that is the case, but I do not recall exactly the numbers that we have. I think they have a higher figure by around $7 million in an authorization bill for certain nurse education programs.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. My understanding is that the Senate accepted the same numbers as the House sent to them, but the only amendment they did was add the cigarette labeling bill to it.

Mr. WAXMAN. That is not my understanding, but maybe Mr. BROYHILL can clear that up.

Mr. BROYHILL. They said that the labeling part was added as an amendment on the floor of the other body.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman would yield for one question: The labeling provision costs the Government no money?

Mr. BROYHILL. That is no cost. But I would like to put this in some context for the gentleman, because the gentleman realizes many of the problems that we do have with respect to many programs like this, and this is especially so in the health professions area.

The administration would like to phase out this program. It is a fact that last year in the last Congress that we did pass a bill that was vetoed that had some authorizations that were considerably above what we could call even freeze levels. These figures are below those. However, I think the difference between what this bill is and what the administration position is, the administration is trying to phase out the program, and I do not think the Senate, the other body, either acting jointly or in conference, would agree to a phaseout of the program. I think that is basically the difference.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN]?

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman of the Health and Environment Subcommittee, do you know why the Senate added $7 million to a bill that the administration is already opposed to on the basis of budget? I yield for his response.

Mr. WAXMAN. I am sorry; I am not able to answer the gentleman's question. I do not have an answer for him.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. What assurance do we have that the Appropriations Committee will correct that error the Senate made?

Mr. WAXMAN. I am sure the Appropriations Committee will do its job with a great deal of attention to whether any amount of money they spend is justified or not. As the gentleman knows, an authorization is a simple authorization. The appropriation will be decided by the Appropriations Committee and then by the Congress.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. If I may engage the Congressman from North Carolina for a moment.

You made the statement on the floor that the Senate was above the present bill, but the Appropriations Committee would bring it down to the appropriate level of last year?

Mr. BROYHILL. I am just judging from the past history of that committee that particularly this year they have been funding these various programs at about the same levels as last year.

I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. I often regret the fact that the Appropriations Committee appropriates less than the authorization committee recommends, but that is usually the case. I do believe that their appropriation for this program is less than the authorization.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. I would like either gentleman to say to the body that the importance of the cigarette labeling bill, which was attached by the Senate, overrides any difficulty we may have on the authorization level which can later be fixed by the appropriation. If you agree with that, then I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

Is that your assertion, that the cigarette labeling aspect of the bill overrides the concern about the authorization level?

□ 2310

Mr. BROYHILL. I think they are both important.

Mr. WAXMAN. I think they are both important as well, and I think there is a special time urgency in getting the bill passed because of the situation with the cigarette companies that need to fix their labels.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. So in your opinion that overrides your concern on the appropriations.

Mr. BROYHILL. If the gentleman would yield, let me see if I can put this into some understanding here.

The cigarette labeling bill is time sensitive inasmuch as if we do not get it on over to the White House now we are running up against this October 1 deadline. When we come back here in September, we do not know what might happen with respect to the legislative process and what would happen with respect to this legislation.

The nurse training bill is important also, and I am not convinced, as one who has been around here for a long time and been through many of these conferences, that we are going to come back from the conference any better than what is in this bill.

So it seems to me we could waste a lot of weeks and weeks of arguing around here and we are not really going to do too much better than what we have in the bill which is on the Speaker's desk.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Again, let me ask the gentleman what assurance does he have for the statements he made that the Appropriations Committee would bring the level back to last year's spending level.

Mr. BROYHILL. I would have to seek the advice of some of my colleagues who are on that committee. All I can say is that it appears to me, at least in the observation of this one Member, that the Appropriations Committee has been somewhat more conservative in the funding of these programs that do have higher authorization. This authorization is, from the standpoint of the percentage over the appropriation, those of you who have dealt with it before know that the authorization is far less than it was a number of years ago. We went through a number of years where the authorization was double the levels of the appropriation. This one is relatively a small amount above the appropriation.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Reclaiming my time, I believed your statement that the Appropriations Committee was more conservative than the authorizing committee until we came to the bill involving NASA and the National Science Foundation, where they went above what we are authorized, and which upset me a great deal.

Mr. WAXMAN. We do not have such luck with the health bills. I do not recall too many times when the Appropriations Committee has gone over any authorization.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Then I will put the House on notice that if the Appropriations Committee is one dime over last year's budget, I will fight it to the death.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN]?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ORPHAN DRUG AMENDMENTS OF 1985

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 1147) to amend the orphan drug provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and related laws, with Senate amendments to the House amendment, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments to the House amendment, as follows:

Page 13, of the House engrossed amendment, strike out all after line 17 over to and including line 17 on page 14 and insert:

(b) PUBLIC LAW 98-527.—Section 122(b)(4)(C) of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act (42 U.S.C. 6022(b)(4)(C)) is amended to read as follows:

"(C) Notwithstanding subparagraph (E)(i), upon application of a State, which under section 133(b)(4)(C) of this act (as in effect on October 18, 1948) was permitted to make expenditures for services without regard to the requirements of section 133(b)(4)(B) of this Act (as so in effect) the Secretary, pursuant to regulations which the Secretary shall prescribe, may permit a portion of the funds which, pursuant to subparagraph (E)(i), must otherwise be expended under the State plan of such State for service activities in the priority services, to be expended in fiscal years 1985, 1986, and 1987 for the additional services for which expenditure was permitted under section 133(b)(4)(C) (as so in effect) if the Secretary determines that—

"(i) such additional services are not priority services;

"(ii) such additional services are not services for which funds are otherwise available under part C, D, or E; and

"(iii) the expenditures of such State on service activities in the priority services has reasonably met the need for those services in such State in comparison to the extent to which the need for such additional services has been met in such State.".

Mr. WAXMAN (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the House amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. BROYHILL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman from California to give an explanation of this bill.

Mr. WAXMAN. If the gentleman will yield, this bill is the reauthorization of the Orphan Drug Act which was adopted several years ago and has been a very successful law in encouraging the development of new drugs for people with rare diseases.

The Senate amendments to the bill deal with the developmental disabilities councils at the State level and there is no controversy over those items. The bill is without controversy in its entirety.

Mr. BROYHILL. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRIBUTE TO DEDICATED AND HARD-WORKING CAPITOL HILL POLICE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LIGHTFOOT] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to take a few minutes to recognize a dedicated, hard-working group of men and women that we oftentimes take for granted.

Due to the nature of their job, we aren't supposed to notice them. It's their duty to serve and protect, be in the background but ever present. I'm referring to the Capitol Hill Police.

During the day we may joke with the officer on the corner, trade a story with the officer by the door or hustle up to the steps in a breathless charge as the officer at the top of the stairs hollers "one more" and we try to make a vote.

There is a very serious side to their job. A side that entails danger, quick decisions, and, many times, hours of boredom.

We are fortunate to live in a country that puts freedom as its No. 1 priority. Unfortunately, there are those who will use that very freedom as a means to perpetrate a very negative end.

Each day literally thousands of people descend on Capitol Hill. Many want to see the inside of this great building that symbolizes the strongest Government on Earth. And they should. It's their building. It's their Capitol.

The officers handle their duties with apparent ease. Kids get lost, directions are asked, traffic tie ups are moved and all the while an eye is kept alert for that one individual that isn't here to see the sights.

That one person, for whatever twisted reason, who is bent on destruction. In most cases when an identity is made, the person or persons are quietly removed to an area of safety.

Most people don't even notice. That's the way it's suppose to be.

During the recent visit of Mr. Gandhi of India, we saw security at a maximum. That was as it should be, yet it was pretty much business as usual for all the rest of us.

One of the officers I had seen earlier in full riot gear joked as I walked back into my office building, "See, here, I am the mild mannered Clark Kent."

It's an appropriate description. Highly trained, motivated, and ready to take on the most dire emergency at a moment's notice, yet calm, friendly, and a helping hand when needed.

My family appreciates them for the job they do keeping our work area safe. I appreciate them as an ex-police officer that understands some of what they are up against.

Let me close by saying maybe we don't always show it, but we really do appreciate our crew in blue and white.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOULTER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. BOULTER. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent yesterday, July 30, 1985. Had I been present, I would have voted in the following manner:

Roll No. 266, final passage of Senate Joint Resolution 180, commemorating the 10th anniversary of the signing of the Helsinki Final Act; "yes."

Roll No. 268, the Coleman of Texas amendment to exempt appropriations for law enforcement agencies and the Postal Service from the Frenzel amendment to H.R. 3036, that reduces each appropriation not required by law by 2.65 percent; "no."

Roll No. 269, the Roybal motion that the Committee of the Whole rise and report H.R. 3036 back to the House; "no."

Roll No. 270, final passage of H.R. 3036, the Treasury-Postal Service appropriations; "no."

Roll No. 272, a Dixon motion that the Committee of the Whole rise and report the D.C. appropriations bill, H.R. 3067, back to the House; "no."

Roll No. 273, a Smith of New Jersey amendment to H.R. 3067 that prohibits use of funds to perform abortions; "yes."

Roll No. 274, final passage of H.R. 3067, the D.C. appropriations; "no."●

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE PASSAGE OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, July 24, 1985, there was a ceremony to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the passage of the Social Security Act in Statuary Hall. The ceremony was planned and organized by a number of groups concerned about the history and future of the Social Security System.

The following is a record of the events of that day, which I wish to be included in today's RECORD, so that all who were not able to be in attendance at that time will be able to read that which occurred:

Mr. PEPPER. Ladies and gentleman, I will ask the audience to please rise for the presentation of the colors, our National Anthem, and the invocation.

PARADE OF THE COLORS—UNITED STATES MARINE CORPS COLOR GUARD

THE NATIONAL ANTHEM—UNITED STATES MARINE CORDOVOX COMBO

INVOCATION BY THE REVEREND JAMES DAVID FORD, CHAPLAIN OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Reverend FORD. Let us pray.

We thank You, Almighty God, for the gifts You have given Your people that promote justice and the common good. We are grateful for those whose visions for this nation have contributed to the welfare of all people, has promoted confidence and security, has given hope and assurance for a better day.

Continue, O Gracious God, to inspire men and women to work for the Mutual benefit of all the people of our nation, that, in the words of the biblical vision, the day will come when justice will roll down as waters, and righteousness like an ever-growing stream.

This we pray, Amen.

MUSICAL SELECTION

Mr. PEPPER. Ladies and gentleman, this occasion is a citizens' demonstration of a national gratitude for an event that occurred almost exactly 50 years ago, the signing of the Social Security bill by President Franklin Delano Roosevelt. That ceremony was on the 17th of August. The Congress will be in recess at that time, so we have chosen to use this day as our day of appreciation and our commemoration.

I know no better spokesman for the meaning of that great enactment than the author of that legislation, Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

[Applause.]

Three years after Social Security had been in effect, or after its enactment in 1935, President Roosevelt spoke to the nation in one of his famous fireside chats. You will hear portions now of that fireside chat on Social Security by our beloved President, Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

RECORDING OF EXCERPT OF ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT ON THE OCCASION OF THE THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF THE PASSAGE OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

Mr. PEPPER. It seems as if there is something mysterious in the way in which providence chooses those who lead a great people in moments of crisis, in moments of great challenge. The man who conceived and initiated Social Security was a special man, Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

In the Congress, there were special men and women who inaugurated it; and in the intervening years, there have been men—gallant, brave and strong—to protect and defend it.

At a time when Social Security was under its greatest attack, at a time when Social Security in principle and in provision was most uncertain as to its future, the Speaker of the House of Representatives has been strong and brave and determined in his defense, his protection of Social Security—a man I think well-qualified not only to bear one of the greatest honors of his country, but indeed the country's highest honor, a notable, great champion, friend, gallant defender of Social Security, the Speaker of the House, the Honorable Thomas P. O'Neill.

[Applause.]

REMARKS OF HONORABLE THOMAS P. O'NEILL, SPEAKER OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The SPEAKER. My colleagues in the Congress, so many distinguished people and old friends who have paid their duty to their government in holding high positions that have ranked through the years that are gathered here today. This idea, of course, is the birth child of Claude Pepper, who recalled that it was 50 years ago that the Social Security Act passed this House and Senate and was enacted into law.

Thank you, Claude, for the kind introduction.

I am pleased to be here to celebrate the 50th Anniversary of the passage of the Social Security Act, and it is an added pleasure to be joined by my former colleague and good friend, Senator Jennings Randolph.

Senator Randolph and Senator Pepper will recall vividly 1935. Those were the days when 25 percent of American workers were unemployed, when 50 percent of American workers were impoverished, when most American farmers were suffocating in either dust or debt. It was also a time when it meant more often than not that, if you were old, you were poor.

Fortunately, we had a President, Franklin Roosevelt, who refused to accept these conditions as a natural result of the business cycle. He realized that the Federal Government has a responsibility to all Americans to promote economic growth and, mostly, individual security.

President Roosevelt sought more than relief, he sought a full recovery for this nation and for his countrymen. He observed that a man needs more than something to live by—he needs something to live for. His support for the Social Security Act reflected his deep commitment to improving the quality of life for older Americans.

As a result of Social Security, most Americans today can look forward to their retirement years happy and confident that they can live in dignity and in relative comfort. Now that over 90 percent of the senior citizens receive Social Security, the poverty rate among the elderly in America today is 14 percent. Twenty-five years ago, many elderly did not qualify for Social Security; and, in 1964, 35 percent of the senior citizens were living in poverty. It is estimated that in 1935, approximately 65 percent of the senior citizens, the golden agers, were living in poverty.

In 1935, the United States was exhausted, in the Depresssion, limited by isolationism and drained by joblessness; yet, our country's leaders committed themselves to a change, committed themselves to a recovery, and committed this nation to a better America for all Americans.

Fifty years later, the United States is the most powerful, most prosperous nation on earth. We have come a long way in 50 years as a nation and as a people. Just think: Fifty years ago, 65 percent of the senior citizens impoverished, 50 percent of all of the average citizens, 25 percent of the nation unemployed. If you were fortunate enough to go to high school, 3 percent went on to college, 8 percent had pensions, and 3 percent had health insurance.

Just think how far this nation has come in improving the well-being not only of our senior citizens, but all Americans.

Social Security is a landmark piece of legislation we celebrate today, and it deserves most of the credit for the progress this nation has made. Today, just as 50 years ago, it represents a commitment to the future, to our nation, and to its people. It recognizes the contribution each generation makes to building a better America, and it demonstrates the ties that bind our people together in making the American dream a reality for all Americans, both young and old.

Senator Pepper has once again done the Congress a great service by organizing this celebration.

Claude, I want to congratulate you on this event. You and Senator Randolph deserve our thanks for the great role you played 50 years ago, as Members of this Congress, for this great Act and for continuing in giving it the continuing support over the past 50 years.

America owes a debt of gratitude to all of you here today who participated in the legislation of 50 years ago. It is the greatest Act that the senior citizens of this country have the privilege of enjoying.

Thank you.

[Applause.]

Mr. PEPPER. Ladies and gentlemen, there was another part of that great defensive team for Social Security in the House of Representatives—a man elevated by his colleagues to the leadership of that body, a man possessed of rare capacity for eloquence. Patrick Henry never pleaded for liberty more passionately or eloquently than this man; as a member of the committee and a leader of the House, has pleaded for the protection of Social Security and for its perfection in the years ahead. His heart is in that great chorus because he knows what it means to so many for it to be enjoyed by the people of our country.

So, I am very proud to present on this occasion a great, eloquent, able defender of Social Security, the Majority Leader of the House of Representatives, the Honorable Jim Wright.

[Applause.]

REMARKS OF HON. JIM WRIGHT, MAJORITY LEADER OF THE U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. WRIGHT. Thank you very much, Claude. Thank you for the privilege of participating in this commemoration.

So pervasive a force in the life of our entire community has Social Security become that it is difficult, if not impossible, to summarize a few of the most benign parts of that heritage. But, to date, in the retrospect of 50 years, it seems to me that the Social Security program has done two magnificent things for the nation, because it has done two marvelous things for people.

The first is that it has banished the cloud of fear which hovered as an ever-present companion of aging over the lives of literally millions of American people. Before the days of Social Security, it was altogether common as middle age came and a man and woman began to realize that the sands of the days and the months and years were slipping inexorably through the hourglass of time, and that they were not accumulating a substantial amount of cash to tide them over the vicissitudes of the future, for fear to become their gnawing companion. Most Americans of middle age and older were haunted by fear of economic insecurity, fear of the disabling disease or illness that would render them jobless and incapacitated, fear of the humiliation of being helplessly dependent upon their loved ones, and losing their independence and their dignity; and, yes, fear of the thing called "the poorhouse"—the term that, but for the grace of God, has largely disappeared from the American vocabulary—fear.

And then on that cold and windy March day of 1933, a man stood with the aid of a cane and looked into the heart of the condition. What he saw there was a picture of stagnation and fear. But then he spoke; and as men and women gathered breathlessly beside radio sets all across this land, that clear, resonant voice came to them bespeaking confidence, and the nation seemed to regain its balance as it tottered there on the brink of the abyss of economic collapse. For the only thing we had to fear was fear itself.

And fear is no longer such a haunting spectre in the process of aging. Retirement has become a happy time of dignity and golden years of fulfillment.

The second thing it has done, I believe, is to reinforce something inherent in the American character to make it a reality, and that is dignity. The Social Security program has given dignity to millions upon millions of American people—the sense that they have earned and paid for a social compact which exists from one generation to the next, the right to have a retirement of dignity and fulfillment.

My recollection of the days before Social Security is intensely personal. I was very young at the time and of an impressionable age. And I suppose when I think of the term "dignity," I personify it in the character of one man—my grandfather.

In 1932, the story of my grandfather was the story of many millions of Americans. For in that year, he, having worked for 23 long years for a national company and being entitled upon the completion of 25 years of faithful service to a pension which would tide him over in his old age, along with all the others employed by that national company for as long as 20 years' duration, was summarily fired. All of them were without a job.

Picture this, if you will: A man of 63 years of age, having devoted the last 23 years of this life to one company and one profession, suddenly without work. There was no Social Security. There was no unemployment compensation. There most assuredly was no such thing as food stamps.

I can remember my grandfather each morning avidly reaching for the newspaper, fire in his eyes and hope in his mind, ready to leave, as he would do each day, and call personally upon everyone who had advertised for anyone to do any form of work, because work was the one thing he most desperately needed and wanted. But, I can remember him coming back each evening, almost visibly shrunken in stature, both drained from his eyes because there were no jobs in 1932 for anybody 63 years of age.

He struggled valiantly to maintain his dignity. My family and I did as many families did throughout the United States: We moved from the little town of Weatherford to Fort Worth, where we could take half of the home that my grandfather and grandmother were attempting to pay for and retire the mortgage on, and give them rent in order that they might have the dignity of paying for that mortgage out of what they saved from the use of part of that home. Families were doing that in those days.

Well, today people receive Social Security payments, not as handouts, not as humiliating acceptances of some welfare, but rather as a matter of right; and they receive it in dignity. It seems to me this is what Franklin Roosevelt had in mind when, in 1935, in signing that historic landmark legislation, he said, "This is the cornerstone of a structure which is being built, and is by no means complete."

Over the intervening half a century, we have superimposed upon that magnificant cornerstone guarantees of medical treatment for those who need it and otherwise would be debilitated without it; unemployment compensation for those who are buffeted by the vicissitudes of an economy that they cannot control; job training and retraining; and employment opportunities for young men and women; opportunities for a young couple to own their own home; some Federal guarantee that, despite what might happen, the loan might be paid; and the assurance that every young couple or every young person born in the most humble circumstances in this country might have as his or her birthright the right to an education.

Those things have been building upon this cornerstone. Much of it goes to the vision, the dedication, the determination of men like him whom I am about to introduce to you.

Throughout the years, his faithfulness, his leadership, his ability to see the right, perform the right, his courage to stand for the right, have helped to build upon this cornerstone which he was present at the process of laying. He is, in many ways, the leader of us all. We acknowledge his inspiration as well as his leadership. Mr. Senior Citizen—more than that, Mr. Dignity—yes, that, too, in many ways, Mr. America: Claude Pepper.

[Standing Applause.]

REMARKS OF HONORABLE CLAUDE PEPPER, CHAIRMAN, COMMITTEE ON RULES, U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. PEPPER. Thank you very much. Thank you.

I am very grateful to my distinguished friend, the leader, for those very generous and kind words of introduction.

I am privileged to be here with you today to have a part in this great occasion where, on behalf of the American people, the millions of them who are covered by Social Security, we can express to that man who once lived, and that spirit which shall never die, our gratitude for what he has done for so many to make life better and richer.

In the last century, down in the basement of this Capitol a man sent a message by a strange little machine to some people in Baltimore. It was what was known as the first telegraph, sent by S.B. Morse. The message was, "What has God wrought?"

I have on my office wall a picture of the first airplane flight at Kitty Hawk by Orville Wright. Aviation began with that brave pioneer.

Noble and historic were these deeds in terms of meaning to the lives of millions of people. I think nothing is deeper than social security in America. Of all the great deeds that President Roosevelt achieved, I put first his leadership in the destruction of that unspeakable dastard, Hitler; second, his saving of America for democracy; and third, Social Security.

I asked Wilbur Mills this morning: "Wilbur, how many people do you suppose, since Social Security has been enacted, have been the beneficiaries of that program?" You know, of course, the program was enacted in 1935. The payments began in 1937. The first benefits, I think, were paid in 1940. We made meaningful amendments in 1939 and thereafter.

But he said, "If you take all of the aspects of Social Security—the survivors' benefits, the dependent children, the educational benefits, the educational benefits which existed until taken away a little while ago, all other benefits," he said, "possibly 100 million people have been bettered by Social Security."

What a legacy. What a man to lead his country.

I don't like to speak about things so personal, but God has mysterious ways his aims to accomplish. If Franklin Roosevelt had remained a gallent, dashing, young figure—patrician that he was—in health, I don't know whether he would ever have had Social Security or not. I don't know whether we would have had many other social security programs that mean so much to so many. But God, or someone, forced the circumstances and brought the proud, handsome, young Franklin Delano Roosevelt in touch with anguish and reality.

He taught him suffering, and he knew he was not the only one in his country to suffer. He said on one occasion, "When you have struggled for a year just to raise your big toe, you can understand what suffering means." So, he had the great pleasure. He put it in that message that we heard portions of here, in that third annual address known as the "Fireside Chat on Social Security."

He said, "There is one unconquered frontier in America." He knew we conquered the wilderness. He knew we crossed the mountains. He knew we would even master the seas. But we still had not mastered fear and want. And he took it as his heavenly task to make a contribution to that last concept, and he challenged us to the maximum.

Today, there are 38 million people who get a check every month from the Social Security program. There are innumerable people who receive benefits as survivors, widows, children; the diminished program, I regret to say, for those seeking an education. Others live in a better shelter, eat better food, live healthier and happier lives, because they can get that Social Security check every month.

And Roosevelt, I read the other day, made a rather poignant observation about Social Security. One of our great battles has been to keep it from being distorted from the social insurance program it is intended to be, from that into a welfare program where the recipient shall have meekly to approach someone, a bureaucrat, and apply and pass a means test.

Roosevelt thought he had solved that. He said, "I put in there that every man and woman who shares in the hope of receiving benefits under Social Security is to pay out of his or her earnings into that fund." And then he added, "With that in the Social Security law, the damned politicians will never be able to take my Social Security bill away from me." And that is what we must never forget.

What it is today, the recipient of a Social Security check can pick it up out of the mailbox, get it in his Post Office box, pick it up from his home, proudly hold it up before the world: "This is mine. I helped to buy with my money."

And the way so many people feel about it was illustrated on one occasion when I was in Birmingham, Alabama, by a lady whose husband I grew up with. I was sitting in their neat, little home. She was a widow. She was proudly telling me about her two sons. One was a minister and the other a businessman. They were both doing well.

I said, "Eunice, do you have Social Security?"

"Yes," she said, "I have Social Security."

"Well," I said, "then you are well off, aren't you? You have your two sons to help you and you have your Social Security."

She drew herself up. "I don't need my sons to help me. I have my Social Security."

How proud she was that she had that. Let's don't ever let anybody take the quality of that character away from the Social Security program.

Well, we have been engaged in the last three or four years on the defensive. We have fought like everything to perserve Social Security and to protect it. We hope in the years ahead that we will be able to perfect it as Roosevelt dreamed and hoped we might be able to do.

Is there anything to do? Women have not been given full equality under the program. And what about Medicare, medical care for the people of America?

A lady sat by my desk the other day; poured out her heart to me: "I have liver disease," she said. "I'll have to have an operation in the next six or nine months, or I'll be dead in the next twelve. I've been to the hospitals. They tell me I'll have to have $150,000 before I can have the operation, and I'll need another $50,000 before the operation is over."

She said, "I have been able to raise some from kind people—$45,000. What am I to do?" Thirty-five years old, the mother of three children, life hanging in the balance for $200,000.

A little bit ago, I was taking testimony at a hearing. Two lovely daughters were pouring out their hearts as to how they had made themselves destitute, one said, in three months. "My sister and I won't have anything. We have been treating our mother who has Alzheimer's disease. We will be destitute. Who will look after her? Will we have to be destitute to get the benefits of Medicaid?"

I sat across the table from a lady in Florida not long ago. She said, "Mr. Pepper, I am a professional obstetrician." She said, "You just don't realize how many children are born with some defect, some handicap, which in most instances could be corrected, but only the big hospitals in the cities can do that kind of operation. Most of these mothers are poor women who don't have any money. They don't know how to get in touch with the proper people in the big hospitals. The children grow up handicapped for life."

One of Roosevelt's great disappointments was he was taken over by the war and he didn't have an opportunity to develop a medical care plan, a medical care program under which, in the American way, by doing his or her part as best as he or she can, every man and woman and child in America will be able to get the medical care that he or she should have.

Is money so dear and life so cheap that somehow we can't allow that divine spark of life to live as long as may be in those in whom it has been entrusted? In the last long journey of life, do people have to die ahead of time, live in ill-health or disease because they can't profit by the skills that we have developed, many of them by public funds?

So, I hope we will regard this day not only as a day of appreciation, but a day of gratitude.

God rest you, Mr. President. We will never forget you. We are grateful. But we will not let you down. We are going to fight whatever else there may be and keep the fight up as long as it needs to be maintained until we accomplish not only the preservation and the protection of social security but its perfection. God bless our ends.

[Standing Applause.]

Mr. PEPPER. We will now have a choral presentation by the United States Army Chorale.

CHORAL PRESENTATION—UNITED STATES ARMY CHORALE

Mr. PEPPER. Now we will hear another great actor in the part of the social security story, a man deeply dedicated to that deep objective. He is Chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, and he is performing a magnificent job in the leadership of the fight for the elderly of our blessed land.

I am very proud to present my friend and our distinguished leader of the elderly, the Chairman of the Select Committee on Aging, the Honorable Ed Roybal of California.

[Applause.]

REMARKS OF HONORABLE EDWARD ROYBAL, CHAIRMAN, SELECT COMMITTEE ON AGING, U.S. HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. ROYBAL. Thank you, Mr. Pepper.

Ladies and gentlemen, I still firmly believe that it is best that I follow ten most excellent members of the Army choral group than one Claude Pepper. [Laughter.]

Ladies and gentlemen, when Social Security was passed many years ago, there were those who predicted it would not survive that decade. But today, on its golden anniversary, Social Security qualifies as one of the great success stories of the century, while at the same time it has a firm foundation for individual financial security in the 21st century.

Social Security is primarily responsible for this country's success in reducing proverty. Fifty years ago, half of all older Americans were, in Franklin D. Roosevelt's words, ill-housed, ill-clad, and ill-nourished. But today, the percentage of poverty among the elderly and the rest of Americans is almost identical. But, if Social Security did not exist, the elderly population—the elderly poverty rates would more than triple and half the nation's elderly would again be ill-housed, ill-clad, and ill-nourished.

Because it does exist, and because it is financially sound, 10 million Americans under age 65 receive Social Security benefits; 5 million children of surviving or disabled parents and other disabled adults depend on Social Security to keep out of poverty. This is a clear indication of how important Social Security can be to a surviving spouse and children and to the security of today's younger workers.

Ironically, some critics still point to Social Security's stunning success as proof that it has outlived its usefulness. To abolish Social Security or reduce its benefits makes about as much sense as doing away with private pensions or IRA's, or forcing healthy people to quit work because of age.

The challenge for Social Security's next years, during the next 50 years, is to preserve and to protect, to defend and improve its benefit package, while also encouraging the growth and development of private pensions, individual savings, and flexible opportunities for senior citizens who have both the ability and the desire to work.

We should make improvements in Social Security for women whose worker years are often interrupted with child care and other family responsibilities. And we should restore the cutbacks which hurt the disabled, which hurt students, and also those retirees who were born after 1916.

I firmly believe that we can reduce Social Security tax rates for all workers. We can eliminate the current tax exemption for those fortunate few who earn over $40,000 per year and, at the same time, continue the sound financing of a system that can provide benefits to a larger participating membership for the people of America.

Yes, ladies and gentlemen, changes should be made, and changes will be made. Social Security will again come under attack, but those changes should be gradual and should be based on common sense. But those changes, however they take place, should be reaffirmations of the principles which have made Social Security the great American success story for the 20th century.

Thank you.

[Applause.]

Mr. PEPPER. Now, ladies and gentlemen, it is my privilege to introduce the next spokesman. He was a Member of the House of Representatives in 1935 when it passed the Social Security bill. He was elected to the House at the same time President Roosevelt was elected to the White House in 1932. He was here during those momentous 100 days when Roosevelt and the Congress saved America from collapse.

He spent 14 years in the House. Then he was out for a while, catching his breath, as it were. Thereafter, he served 26 years in the Senate. He remained in the Senate until the end of last year.

He is still in good health, great spirits, still busy going over America advocating, supporting, helping create good causes. He is a man deeply dedicated to this great cause, because he was in, as they say, at the beginning.

I have the honor to present a great American and my great friend, former United States Senator, former Representative, Jennings Randolph.

[Applause.]

REMARKS OF HONORABLE JENNINGS RANDOLPH

Senator RANDOLPH. Good afternoon, ladies and gentlemen.

As we come to the end of the speaking program, Wilbur will close it out. We have made an agreement not to speak over 35 minutes each. [Laughter.]

Wilbur, I am going to cut it down to a few minutes. I thought you might have a message to take 17 or 18 minutes.

I do want to say the most significant bill ever passed in the Congress of the United States was the Social Security Act of 1935. [Applause.]

Yes, I was just thinking as I sat here with all of you young people today, we all are in that category. You know, we are not here thinking of aging. We are thinking of those we can speak of as being in that period of their lives in praise of age. Wouldn't that be better than aging?

But this is a very wonderful afternoon. I have never seen Statuary Hall come alive before. I look around and I can almost see smiles on the faces of some of those who are here at this time.

I loved the singers from the Army today, that choral group. They sang about the flag. Abraham Lincoln knew what that flag was. And there was a building constructed during his administration, a very small building. It was the Treasury Department. Very small; our deficit wasn't large then.

But they asked the President: "Mr. Lincoln, what part would you want in the program?"

"Well," he said, "I would like to raise the American flag."

So, he made the shortest speech that any Chief Executive of our great and wonderful country has ever made. He said, "I have been assigned to raise the American flag. This, I will do. And after I have raised it up, it will be for the people to keep it up."

I felt today, as I come here with all of you, that this is not the day just out of patriotic fervor, but it is a day of looking back, because, in looking back, America at that period looked forward. Franklin Roosevelt certainly looked back, yes; but he was constantly looking forward.

Yes, I remember when I came to this historic Hill in March of 1933. I will never forget those hours. But, as I sat here today, I was just thinking of F.D.R. over and over and over again. And, you know, of all the legislation perhaps that he fostered, this might be for many reasons perhaps the epitome.

Franklin Roosevelt, I know, would, if he could hear us here today, realize that we are remembering all of those who were a part of that early Congress in 1933. It is not very important, but I have cast 10,753 roll call votes on this Hill. I know I did right when I voted for Social Security in 1935. You know what was that vote? I checked it out today. We had the introduction of the measure on the 11th of April; but on the date, April 13, just two days later, in the House, we voted on a roll call for this legislation, in fact, by a vote of 372 to 33.

Those were the days, you know, the Soviet Union—believe it or not; it can all be proven—they were encouraging Americans who were unemployed in this country to come there and they would give them jobs. This was a time in the history of our country when we were really in trouble and the unemployment reaching sometimes 40 percent throughout the nation, millions of people actually on the move, living in almost cardboard houses in some parts of our country. Those were very crucial days.

So, I repeat: It was on April 13 that we voted on roll call 372 to 33; and then it was on June 19 that the Senate voted 77 to 6. I don't say the House was first. That is not important. But we had to go through two conferences—not one, but two—very difficult conferences. Then, of course, as I remember it, it was the 14th of August when Franklin Roosevelt signed the measure into law.

Today, it doesn't matter how many roll calls you cast, how many Members of the Senate with whom you served. I served with 283. How many House Members? I served with over 600. Yet, that all is not too important, except you permit me, perhaps, the mention of it here today.

I say that this is a happy hour, not just for a few—those in Statuary Hall with Claude Pepper—but for all men and women throughout the country. It is a day not just of memory, but a day of knowing that that which was done was right. Let us hope America will always do right.

Thank you very much.

[Applause.]

Mr. PEPPER. Now, ladies and gentlemen, as our last speaker I wish to introduce a man—he may not have been the father or the mother of Social Security, but he is certainly the midwife, because he was most instrumental in its delivery. He was the assistant to the professor from his university invited to write the Economic Security bill in 1934 by President Roosevelt. He worked intermittently with him, all the way through on to the completion of the enactment of the Social Security bill and for years thereafter. And then, as Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, and finally Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, he has carried on this great program of Social Security.

He has had more to do with the inception, with the birth and the growth of Social Security than any living person. We are proud we can have here today, to tell us some of these people who worked with him and some of the throes of those early days, a great American, the Honorable Wilbur Cohen.

[Applause.]

REMARKS OF WILBUR COHEN

Mr. COHEN. I am especially happy today to have the House of Representatives take the leadership in commemorating the Social Security Act, since the House of Representatives has been so instrumental in the development, the preservation, the protection and the expansion of this magnificent program.

It is especially wonderful for me today to recognize the fact that, 50 years later, we have such a group of men and women in the Speaker, the Majority Leader, the Chairman of the Rules Committee, the Chairman of the Select Committee, and the former Chairman of the Social Security Committee here who have been such loyal protectors of the program. I am especially happy to participate today.

Fifty-one years ago, I was a student at the University of Wisconsin and I came on my longest and most important journey in a rumble seat. Since I didn't have any money, I begged a friend of mine going to Richmond to take me along. And that was 51 years ago when I came to this great city to work with several people who are here with me today, who I have remained both a colleague and a co-worker and a friend, and I want to introduce them to you.

First, a wonderful lady who came with me from Madison, Wisconsin 51 years ago and who did the major research on the German social security and the foreign social security systems: Marianne Sackmann.

[Applause.]

Marianne Sackmann Linnenberg today, but I always think of her as "Sackmann."

Secondly, a young man then who I worked with over these 50 years who has done the major actuarial work on practically every aspect of the Social Security program, and whose integrity has established the integrity of the actuarial estimates: Robert J. Myers.

[Applause.]

No Commissioner of Social Security, no Secretary, no Republican, no Democrat of the Ways and Means Committee, the Senate Finance Committee has ever basically challenged his estimates; although, I will come later to the searching questions of Mr. Mills, who was the only Member of Congress I know who could take Bob Myers on.

The third member here today is my good friend, Robert R. Nathan, who did all of the unemployment estimates in 1934–35 and, in effect, constructed the estimates for unemployment which didn't exist prior to 1934. Bob?

[Applause.]

Today, you take for granted every month when you hear the unemployment estimates being given out, but there is the man who created the concept and developed the basic material upon which we all rely today.

They worked with me and I worked with them in the Committee on Economic Security. We little band of brothers and sisters keep in touch, because we were privileged to be part of this remarkable achievement 51 years ago.

Now I would like to introduce my dear friend of many years, Maurine Mulliner, the Secretary of the Social Security Board from its inception.

Maurine, will you stand?

[Applause.]

When any oral historian today wants to cite something about some initial controversy, they have to go back to her minutes in order to verify what was said or done in terms of the original development of the program.

The first Assistant Executive Director of the Social Security Board, and later the Director of the Bureau of Old Age Insurance, my good friend of many, many years, John Corson.

[Applause.]

I can't see because of the lights. I really can't see out in the audience very well, except if there are any others who are invited today from this group who will come—I don't see them. If there are, I wish you would stand up and I will introduce you.

We invited quite a number more, but 51 years later it is a little difficult for some of them to get there.

I now want to introduce two of the Members of Congress that I have worked with for many years and who have made great contributions to Social Security, as many others have. One of them I worked with for 35 years. I have answered at least 20,000 questions that he asked me over those years. We sometimes have differed; we sometimes had to work closely together; we sometimes had to force compromises. But he has been a loyal and dedicated believer in the principle of social security and social insurance; Wilbur D. Mills, the former Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee.

[Applause.]

And my own Congressman, who was Chairman of the Subcommittee on Social Security until recently and still is a Member of the House Committee on Ways and Means—and if I had 10 minutes, I would tell you what I think a great committee the Committee on Ways and Means is and what he has done to help defend Social Security, particularly the disability program: Jake Pickle, Congressman from Austin, Texas, a great city with a great university.

[Applause.]

Being a professor, I only speak in 50-minute units.

There were giants on the earth in 1935, giants in the Executive Branch, in the Legislative Branch, and in the Judicial Branch. The 74th Congress, which convened in January of 1935, had a rendezvous with history. It was to be an era of social reform at the national level, such as that which swept the States and the nation some 25 to 30 years before.

In five short months in 1934, the basic framework of the Social Security Act was formulated, and in seven months the Congress of the United States perfected it and enacted it into law. A monumental change in public policy was underway which was to have a tremendous impact upon generations to come.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt sent to Congress on January 17 a persuasive message of only 2½ pages, accompanied by a comprehensive report of 74 pages—a brilliant report, I might add. The latter report of the Cabinet Committee on Economic Security was prepared under the direction of a most remarkable woman, Frances Perkins, the Secretary of Labor and the first woman Cabinet member in the history of our nation. She has not really gotten her full due.

The report was written by Edwin E. Whittey, my professor of economics from the University of Wisconsin who, in 1934, contained in his one brain all of the encyclopedic information about social security throughout the world.

This report was orchestrated by one of the greatest public administrators I have ever known, Arthur J. Falkmeyer, an Assistant Secretary of Labor who later became the Chairman of the Social Security Board and who, with the help of several of the people here—Maurine and John and others—created the administrative structure on a nonpolitical, nonpartisan, merit basis that put the program in effect.

The proposed legislation, 63 pages in length, was sent up on the same day by the President and was called the Economic Security Act, or bill. It was primarily drafted by Thomas E. Eliot, a young man in the Labor Department whom we invited today but could not come, whose legislative insight subsequently earned him the great opportunity, cherished by many of you and by John Quincy Adams, since he later earned a seat in the House of Representatives.

The bill was introduced in the House on the same day by the Chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means, that large, rugged farmer from North Carolina, Robert L. Doughton, nicknamed "Huey," and the sweet, gentle former coal miner from Maryland, David Lewis; and in the Senate by that nationally known leader of social legislation, Senator Robert F. Wagner.

The urgency and the uniqueness of this historic occasion was demonstrated by public hearings which began almost simultaneously in both Houses, in the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Committee on Finance.

But, in deference to the law of physics which holds that a person cannot be in two places at the same time, the Senate appropriately deferred to the constitutional prerogatives of the House of Representatives that all tax legislation must originate in the House, and began hearings two days later so that Professor Whittey could testify in both committees, which he did within 48 hours.

The nation was in such critical times, as Jennings Randolph and others have said, that there was an urgent need for prompt action; and I doubt there have been many times in our history when both Houses have hearings simultaneously on a single bill of such magnitude.

The hearings in the House took place between Monday, January 21, and February 7, 1935, and totaled 1,141 pages of testimony, the committee going into Executive Session almost immediately, and in less than two months, they reported out a clean bill.

In the Executive Sessions of the Committee on Ways and Means, there were, as there have been ever since, the legislators and lawyers, such as John W. McCormack of Massachusetts, later the Speaker of the House, and the man whose gavel passed the Medicare and Medicaid bill in 1935 in the House; Jere Cooper of Tennessee, who later became the Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee; Fred Vinson, who later became the Chief Justice of the United States; and John Dingell, the father of the present distinguished Chairman of the House Committee on Energy and Commerce, who was the House sponsor of the first national comprehensive insurance bill in 1943.

Day after day, these distinguished legislators went through the bill line by line, page after page. A lot were new, innovative, far-reaching ideas, new proposals, changing, elaborating, clarifying under constant questioning from Members of both the committee and of another towering figure in the House, Mr. Middleton Beaman, the House Legislative Counsel. Mr. Beaman was the first Legislative Counsel of the House, and I know not how many legislative innovations he drafted during his tenure from 1916 to 1949, but in his absence I will say that the Social Security bill was certainly one of the greatest accomplishments which he achieved, with the help of Tom Eliot.

And Jere Cooper, later on the Floor when he retired said, "It was my privilege to attend many conferences with the late President Roosevelt, with the Attorney General of the United States and other officials who were working on that important measure. We found the advice and counsel of Mr. Beaman to be valuable at all times, and it is my conviction that the measure today has served the test of constitutionality largely because of the contribution by Mr. Beaman."

Ever since, I think even during the tenure of Mr. Mills, we will learn the tremendous contribution made by the House Legislative Counsel in the perfection of legislation.

When the clean bill was reported out and the committee was in Executive Session, somebody said—we can't remember who it was—"Well, we have to distinguish the clean bill from the old bill."

Well, the old bill was called the "Economic Security" bill. So somebody said, "Well, call it the 'Social Security' bill. That will distinguish it."

No one thought much of this change at the time. It was a rather routine discussion. But this term spread first to New Zealand and then around the world, so that today this concept, this term, this Americanism has worldwide recognition just like Classic Coca-Cola.

The Minority report, however, of the Members representing the Minority party on the committee made five objections to the old age plan that we today call "Social Security." I would like to just read them to you.

The first was that it was unconstitutional. Well, that was overcome.

The second was it would destroy private pension plans. Even with all the pension plans that were in existence that day, at that time, on the railroad—there were only 400 in the United States as of that time—it not only did not destroy them, there are thousands upon thousands today which it helped to create.

Third was, it would retard the economic recovery. And the interesting thing, they said, if that is so, don't put a payroll tax on; pay it all out of general revenues. I think the present Administration would fall over if that is what had happened in 1935. But that is what the Minority group did then.

They said it would establish a bureaucracy in competition with private insurance. As a matter of fact, private insurance today has accelerated expansion particularly in light of this, because of Social Security.

Forth, it would impose a crushing burden upon industry and labor.

I tell my students—and I use this—don't believe everything you read. The House of Representatives did not agree with the Minority report. It passed on April 19 by a vote of 392. But there was a motion to recommit, to strike out the old age plan, which was defeated 149 to 253, and thereby stands the great contribution the House of Representatives made, because the Senate did try to emasculate the program. But it was the House of Representatives that recognized the nature of the plan and its importance, and it is the plan we have built upon today.

It is often overlooked that the Social Security Act also provided the basis for stimulating all the States to add State unemployment insurance laws, to finance nationwide employment service, for the establishment of maternal and child health, crippled children, aid to the blind, aid to dependent children for the basic Federal structure of public health grants, the permanent continuation of the vocational rehabilitation program. All of those were just little add-ons in the program of 1935.

In effect, what that Act of '35 did, in addition to old age, is it built into a permanent structure the nationwide safety net which progressive legislators of both political parties have been struggling to build for the previous 146 years without the basic help of the Federal Government until Franklin Delano Roosevelt came along.

Now, the other body did act promptly, reporting a revised bill on May 20, but proceeded to make several basic changes in the House bill, a few that were improvements but several retrogressive steps. One of the changes passed June 19 proposed to allow private pension plans to contract out a social security old age system, thus I think—and I think Mr. Heinz will agree with me—undermining the actuarial foundation and the portability and universality of the plan.

The House rightfully and prophetically refused to accept this basic departure, and that was the nature of the first conference report. They sent the bill back to the Senate for a second conference. Just think how far-sighted they were.

The technical problems presented by the idea of contracting out were so monumental that it was never possible to work it out in any reasonable period of time in 1935. The Senate then backed down and the House accepted the conference report on August 8, and the Senate on August 9, without the emasculation that the Senate provided, and a new day dawned in the United States.

Franklin D. Roosevelt, in his jovial mood, radiating the confidence which helped to restore the confidence of the American people in those difficult days, affixed his signature to the bill five days later. You heard several quotations from him. I won't repeat them. But I will give you a couple that have not been quoted.

"We can never insure 100 percent of the population against 100 percent of the hazards and vicissitudes of life," he said, "but we have tried to formulate a plan which will give some measure of protection to the average citizen and to his family against the loss of a job and against poverty-riddled old age."

In addition to his famous statement that it is a cornerstone in the structure but is by no means complete, he recognized the incremental nature of what had to be done, which occurred in 1939 with the addition of survivors' insurance; in 1956 with disability insurance; in 1965 with Medicare. And I am sure I can say without contradiction, if he were here today he would say it is still not complete.

It was enacted as a protection, he said, to future administrations in the necessity of going deeply into debt to furnish relief to the needy, to flatten out the peaks and valleys of inflation. It is, in short, a law that will take care of human needs and, at the same time, provide for the United States an economic structure of vastly greater sounding.

That is the philosophy of the economic stabilizer which Social Security has provided for the economy that has flattened out some of the worst ups and downs of our economic cycle.

Now, in my opinion, the Social Security Act of 1935 was, in one sense, a quantum leap in social policy; but, in another sense, also an incremental development, a social policy development. Under President Roosevelt's magnificent leadership, he broke with the negative Federal policy advanced by President Pierce and supported by President Hoover in expanding public and Federal responsibility for dealing with the problems of old age, unemployment, disability, health, welfare, and childhood dependency.

Yet, under his leadership, he carried that out in a way built upon well-accepted institutional practices. It utilized the widely understood pooling of the risk concept prevalent in private insurance by applying it in principle to social insurance in old age and unemployment and Federal/State cooperation in connection with unemployment insurance, welfare, rehabilitation, public welfare, child health and social services.

The Act, in my judgment, was thus an expression of the ability of the Roosevelt Administration and his advisers to combine both a radical and a conservative program in one legislative package. The Act has served as a mechanism over the past several decades, at least until 1981, to stimulate increases in both public and private expenditures for social security, health, welfare, and social services that have become a built-in stabilizer of consumer purchasing power permitting the continued function of the marketplace profit, collective bargaining system and a work-oriented free enterprise economy.

But President Roosevelt was concerned about the future of his handiwork; and, as you have been told, he was very concerned about the possible future, political changes and proposed cutbacks or repeal of the Social Security System in the future. Thus, he supported and justified the use of contributory social insurance by employers and employees paying the costs to finance the program as the method that would assure continuation and support of a statutory and political rights of individuals to receive benefits without an income or needs test in times of financial or budget constraints.

In my opinion, he foresaw the present and he built in adequate defenses against it. He helped establish the principle that social security was a social compact, a solemn commitment which the Congress made to the contributors of the system and which have nothing to do with the deficit.

At the time he signed the Act into law, President Roosevelt explained the basic incremental nature of the program and contemplated, as did the Committee on Economic Security, that eventually there would be survivors' insurance and disability insurance and Medicare, and hopefully national health insurance in the long-distant future. The building of the program has been a continuing process during the past 50 years which Roosevelt expected to go on until the program provided protection, as he said, against all the major hazards of life.

In my opinion, the task is still incomplete. There is a lot more to do. And I am certain that the House of Representatives will do that in the future.

It is obvious, as you look about the world, there is no one best or simple way to provide social security. There have to be accommodations to differing viewpoints and conditions. But, just as there are ways to form a more perfect union in marriage and in merchandising, there are even better ways to raise children than I know of, and there are better ways to improve family life, so does the Social Security.

But the one thing I learned in 50 years is, you got to build on what you have got. You can't constantly reform or restructure everything all the time and tinker with it in the hopes that it will improve it. When it isn't broke, as it isn't, don't fix it.

Nevertheless, the 1935 Act represents a significant and innovative step which created a workable institutional network, which has now survived 9 Presidents and 25 Congresses. There is no current evidence, in my opinion, despite harsh criticism and many proposed alternatives, that the Congress intends to change the basic structure, the fundamental philosophy or financing arrangements of the social insurance feature of the present law.

Although the provisions in the Social Security Act undoubtedly will change—and I hope improve in the future, as it has in the past—in my judgment, based on these 50 years, it will remain a dynamic and influential factor in the American economic, social and political life. And 50 years from now, people will still get their benefits and the system will still be financially sound, and I invite you to come back with me 50 years from now and celebrate that occasion.

[Applause.]

Certainly, the Social Security Act is one of the 10 greatest pieces of domestic legislation in the history of our republic. The House of Representatives, its Speakers, its Majority Leaders, its committee chairman of the Subcommittee on Social Security, have been its initiator over the years, its defender, its protector, and its mentor until this very day. May it always be so.

Thank you.

[Applause.]

Mr. PEPPER. Ladies and gentlemen, I wish to thank all of those who have contributed to this great occasion. I especially want to thank the United States Marine Corps Color Guard, the Combo, and the United States Army Chorale for all the magnificant muscial renditions which we appreciate very much.

You have in front of you—I want this row to stand over here; and the first two people and one right down there in this row, please stand up.

This is the committee that worked with us in putting the program together: The Honorable Bert Siedman, representing the Honorable Lane Kirkland from the American Federation of Labor; Jake Kliman; William Hutton, Executive Director of the Council of Senior Citizens; the Honorable Peter Hughes, one of the leaders of AARD; this great lady here, Maggie Kuntz, founder and head of the Gray Panthers; and Mr. Andrew Riden, head of the Aging Council.

Over here—I want him to stand up, too—Judge Hansen of the great international organization called the International Eagles. He came all the way from the West to be with us on this occasion. For many years, on the 14th of August, the date when President Roosevelt signed the Social Security bill, his organization, the International Eagles, has had a ceremony at Hyde Park to commemorate the significance of this great occasion.

Judge Hansen, we are grateful to all of you for being here with us today.

[Applause.]

This red-headed, tall, young man back here is the General Counsel to the Rules Committee and Staff Director of that committee. His name is Tom Spulak. He has been working with this committee and has put our program together. We are very grateful to you, Tom.

[Applause.]

Now we will have everyone rise, if you will, please.

I want to thank, in the warmest way, every one of you for being here. I hope you will go out and carry the message of gratitude for Social Security and determine that you will always be one of its preservers and its protector.

After our benediction, the audience will please remain standing; and, with the chorus, we will sing "God Bless America."

BENEDICTION

Reverend FORD. Let us pray.

The Lord bless us and keep us. The Lord make His face shine upon us and be gracious unto us. The Lord lift up His countenance upon us and give us peace. Amen.

SINGING OF "GOD BLESS AMERICA"

Mr. PEPPER. Goodbye. God bless.●

HOW TO BREAK THE ARMS CONTROL IMPASSE—A STAR WARS SOLUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Speaker, in a recent issue of the New Republic former National Security Adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski provided a cogent insightful observation concerning our Nations Strategic Defense Initiative. I commend the article by Mr. Brzezinski to the attention of my colleagues and ask that it be included in the RECORD.

HOW TO BREAK THE ARMS CONTROL IMPASSE

A STAR WARS SOLUTION

The usual danse macabre of American-Soviet arms control negotiations is about to begin. The process is typically initiated by a Soviet announcement to leaders of the U.S. government, and to the myriad self-appointed American accommodationists trooping to Moscow to seek on their own a "fair" solution, that the ongoing stalemate is due entirely to American rigidity. The Soviets insist that they cannot give an inch, and that only a massive display of American good faith—translated into unilateral concessions—can revive the negotiations.

In the late 1970s the Soviets made it clear that progress in negotiations would be contingent upon U.S. abandonment of its cruise missile program. In 1984 they premised even the beginning of arms control talks on the dismantling of the U.S. Pershing and cruise missiles already deployed in Europe. Then the MX missile came to be designated as the impediment to any compromise. And now the Strategic Defense Initiative, Reagan's so-called Star Wars proposal, has been identified as the mortal enemy of arms control.

These arguments are then faithfully reproduced on the Op-Ed pages of U.S. and West European papers. Renowned professors, former ambassadors, various politicized scientists, and leaders of the arms control lobby plead for a demonstration of American good faith—which happens to coincide with the acceptance of what the Soviets are demanding at the time. The process of negotiation thus begins in earnest—but among us Americans! The Russians, meanwhile, sit at the table in Geneva and wait for the eventual U.S. concessions.

It is a normal procedure for the United States to prepare for serious negotiations with the Soviet Union by defining a tough opening gambit, to be followed by a more flexible position that would be exercised in conjunction with some demonstrated Soviet willingness to compromise. But it is usually only a matter of time before some disgruntled official leaks the substance of the fallback position to one of the ex-ambassadors, peace-loving professors, or any one of the 535 representatives and senators who have lately become our surrogate secretaries of defense and state. Any one of them then feels free to publicize the fallback position as his constructive suggestion. Indeed, the latest fashion is to compose a joint letter published under three or four prestigious signatures, strongly urging the U.S. to make further unilateral concessions in order to convince the Soviets that we are negotiating in earnest. After we prove our good intentions, the Russians may be prepared to accept our third—or fourth—fallback position as a proper match for their own unyielding position.

The Soviet argument against SDI and the domestic critics' case against SDI are politically complementary. The Soviets say that SDI threatens the militarization of space, and that there will be no arms control agreement unless it is abandoned. The American critics say SDI will not work, that it will cost too much, that the Soviets can very easily overcome it, and that the Soviets are dreadfully fearful of it. The logical inconsistency of these arguments is less important than the political symmetry of their intended effect—namely that the U.S. should unilaterally forgo the SDI program.

In fact, nothing could be more damaging to the prospects for real arms control than the jettisoning of SDI. Indeed, the time has come for the United States to bite the bullet on the SDI question. Only if a strategic defense system is deployable within the next decade or so, and only if our will to deploy it is proven credible, can the United States trade it for a genuine and comprehensive arms control agreement with the Soviets. It is essential that this system be capable of disrupting and rendering militarily useless a Soviet first strike by intercepting missiles early in flight or by knocking them out as they descend toward the United States. Anything less than that virtually guarantees that there will be no comprehensive arms control agreement.

The reason for this proposition, unpalatable though it may be to the arms control lobby, is rooted both in the changing character of nuclear weaponry and in the nature of Soviet strategic deployments. In the 1970s both sides enjoyed large strategic forces whose primary function was to pose the threat of annihilation to the other country. These systems were not susceptible to preemptive destruction. The emerging reality of the 1980s and 1990s is that both sides are deploying far more accurate weapons. These weapons are capable of a preemptive first strike that could eliminate the opponent's strategic forces—and prevent effective retaliation. For the first time it is possible to contemplate the possibility of an attack that destroys an overwhelming majority of the other side's forces while also disrupting its command and communications structures to such an extent that any response would be marginal, spasmodic, and conceivably not totally destructive. In short, as accuracy increases so does the benefit of striking first.

This is not to argue that the Soviets (or the United States) are likely or certain to launch a first strike. It is simply to say that the nuclear relationship is growing ever more precarious. This is the current danger in the American-Soviet military situation. It needs to be addressed and resolved by the arms control process, if possible; or unilaterally, if arms control remains stalemated.

But there is another problem raised by the advent of the highly accurate weaponry. The Soviet Union is now deploying such forces in large numbers; the United States is not. How can we negotiate effectively in this situation? We somehow have to convince the Soviets to limit the further deployment of their new SS-24 and SS-25 missiles, and to limit significantly the deployment of existing SS-18s and SS-19s, all of which have counterforce capability. Without such limitations, by the early 1990s the Soviets—even by conservative estimates—will have enough missiles to place the entire U.S. arsenal in jeopardy. Only our Trident and Poseidon submarines already out at sea might escape destruction from a Soviet first strike. And with the confusion and resulting disintegration of communications systems, the submarine forces might not be in a position to retaliate effectively.

In contrast, the United States is not likely to be able to threaten the Soviet Union in a comparable way. No ongoing or likely deployment program will enable us to launch a disarming attack. Even if the U.S. had some form of strategic defense in order to protect its missile forces, we would still have far too few MX missiles, D-5 missiles on Trident submarines, and Midgetmen to even permit contemplation of such a disarming first-strike attack at any point between now and the end of the century.

In these circumstances, the decision to go ahead with the SDI makes eminent sense. But it also means reformulating it politically and strategically. The U.S. should drop or at least de-emphasize President Reagan's idealistic hope for total nuclear defense for all our population. We should also abandon our unwillingness to consider SDI in the bargaining process. If we implement that part of the SDI program which by the mid-1990s would enable us to disrupt a Soviet first strike, we would reinforce deterrence and promote nuclear stability. That means concentrating on terminal defense and boost-phase interception.

Once we establish our determination to act on the SDI, we are in a better position to strike a bargain. We can say to the Soviets that we both face essentially two choices, one mutually beneficial, the other especially costly to them, but both stabilizing. The first choice is to renegotiate the 1972 ABM treaty to permit deployment of strategic missile defense, but without either side improving its ability to carry out a first strike. Then, in return for significant reductions in SS-24s, SS-25s, SS-18s, and SS-19s, the United States would not deploy its strategic defense system. The second option would be pursued if Soviets were unwilling to accept such a bargain. The United States would unilaterally terminate the ABM treaty and proceed with SDI. This would render the Soviets' new generation of accurate missiles useless and wipe out their multibillion ruble investment in them.

Some critics of the SDI argue that the Soviets could respond by vastly increasing their offensive deployments. There are two problems with this line of thinking. First, if the Soviets do respond by building up, they will confirm the ominous suspicion that they are intent on preserving a first-strike capability against the United States; if so, the urgency of negating that threat is all the greater.

Second, if the Soviets expand their offensive forces, the strategic defense could be expanded proportionally. Remember that such a system would not need to be foolproof since it would not be designed to defend populations; it would only need to be capable of significantly disrupting an attack on U.S. strategic forces. In such a competition we would have the advantage. It would be far cheaper for us to add defensive missiles than for them to add highly accurate offensive missiles. (Those who make the most ambitious claims for the SDI should bear in mind that we could not compete so well if we were seeking to build a foolproof defense of our cities. If our defense had to be 100 percent effective, it would cost us far more to expand it than it would cost the Soviets to expand their offensive forces.)

To shape such an effective U.S. defense strategy and a meaningful negotiating posture, President Reagan's SDI needs to be redefined. We must show the Soviets both that we can deploy a strategic defense system soon and that we will negotiate over its deployment if they are willing to make stabilizing reductions in their offensive missile forces. In the event of Soviet unwillingness to accept such an arrangement, we would be in position unilaterally to achieve strategic security for ourselves. And because the SDI would not be accompanied by a massive deployment of disarming first-strike offensive U.S. systems, we would in no way increase our strategic threat to the Soviets. Either way SDI promises a genuinely stabilized nuclear equilibrium between the United States and the Soviet Union. The time to act is now.

LOBBYING REFORM

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, our current lobbying disclosure law is not working well. Enacted in 1946, the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act was designed to find out who the lobbyists are, how much they are spending on lobbying activities, and who their financial supporters are. Failure by lobbyists to comply could result in criminal penalties of imprisonment or fines, and restrictions on future lobbying. The law is rather limited in scope. For example, a description of the kinds of lobbying activities engaged in is not required. In 1954, the Supreme Court upheld the act's constitutionality, but in doing so further restricted its scope: Direct lobbying—directly and personally communicating with Members of Congress to influence legislation—is covered, but not indirect lobbying or some types of grassroots lobbying—stirring up a Member's constituents about a particular issue. Moreover, organizations that spend their own money to lobby are not covered.

The result is an act that seems more loophole than law. Currently, far fewer than half of the estimated lobbyists in Washington register, and some experts estimate that the amount spent on all types of lobbying may be 10 times higher than reported. The Justice Department has not tried to enforce the law since the 1954 Supreme Court decision. Adoption by lobbyists of state-of-the-art technologies is causing additional problems, as the source of the lobbying contacts becomes more and more difficult to detect. Lobbying organizations now use proxy mailings to contact Congressmen using constituents' names, develop artificial constituencies for a cause through the use of highly sophisticated computer mailing lists, and use laser printers to make up individualized grassroots letters for their members on what appears to be personalized stationery.

In an effort to improve the public disclosure of the nature and extent of lobbying activities, I am introducing two proposals embodying quite different approaches. I am introducing them in order to get the general concepts advanced and the congressional debate underway; I am open to suggestions for revising specific provisions. The first, the Public Disclosure of Lobbying Act of 1985, is essentially the tough lobbying reform bill passed by the House—but not the Senate—in 1978:

Instead of requiring registration only of groups whose principal purpose is to lobby and who receives funds from others to lobby, anyone who spends more than a specified amount of money or time lobbying must register.

It requires disclosure of an organization's lobbying activities, including basis information on issue interests, paid professionals who lobby on its behalf, and itemized expenditures relating to lobbying. It also requires disclosure of extensive grassroots lobbying activity.

Violators would be subject to civil as well as criminal penalties.

I prefer this approach of broad disclosure with tough sanctions. But, frankly, I believe it would be difficult to pass at the present time. Such a reform proposal failed to pass in the late 1970's even though there was a considerable push for post Watergate reforms, strong support by President

Carter for lobbying reform, and less emphasis on deregulation than today.

Thus I am also introducing a second proposed bill, the Integrity in Lobbying Act of 1985. Senator DURENBERGER is introducing identical legislation on the Senate side. This second approach calls for broader disclosure of more relevant lobbying information, while requiring less recordkeeping. The penalties for noncompliance are less strict as well:

It covers a broader spectrum of lobbyists, and covers grassroots and other indirect lobbying efforts, as well as traditional direct lobbying.

It expands the information to be reported, including rough estimates of expected lobbying activities, the amount of time spent by volunteers on lobbying activities, and the number of media contacts for the purpose of lobbying.

It will make the information easily accessible to Members through the congressional computer system. The information will also be retrievable according to subject area.

It will ease the recordkeeping burden on lobbyists by requiring only general estimates, and will make the reporting form easy to fill out—probably a one-page standardized form with boxes to check and space for short descriptions.

It tries a novel approach of having the disclosure voluntary, relying upon the value lobbyists place on their respectability.

This self-regulatory approach may be more plausible than it sounds at first. Some 6,500 lobbyists register under the current system, even though compliance is not enforced and the act is burdensome, not many organizations have a principal purpose of personally lobbying members, and Members of Congress have limited interest in the information reported. Moreover, recent studies have indicated that lobbyists value their respectability as their most important asset—ahead of money, membership, contacts, and allies. If Congress declares that such disclosure is important, and greatly simplifies the filing process, actual compliance might be high. In addition, although it is a voluntary process, those who choose not to register may lose some of their credibility on Capitol Hill.

It should be noted that the Integrity in Lobbying Act of 1985 is drafted to be an addition to current law, rather than its replacement. For those engaged in lobbying activities not covered by present law, the bill sets up a new reporting system. For those engaging in the limited lobbying activities covered by the 1946 act, the bill would encourage them to file under the new expanded and simplified reporting system; but if they decide not to, they would still be required to file under the 1946 act. In short, there is no loss from the present system, but significant possible gain.

Overall, the emphasis of this proposed bill is on providing Congress with management information—timely, general information of what lobbyists are up to in order to get a good feel for what pressures are being brought upon the legislative process—rather than on getting incriminating information, trying to catch lobbyists lying or engaging in sinister activities. Lobbyists play an important role in our democratic process, and their activity should not be stifled. However, it is in the best interest of Congress and the general public to know what sort of lobbying activities they are engaged in. As the Supreme Court pointed out in its 1954 decision:

> Present day legislative complexities are such that individual Members of Congress cannot be expected to explore the myriad pressures to which they are regularly subjected. Yet the full realization of the American ideal of government by elected representatives depends to no small extent on their ability to properly evaluate such pressures. Otherwise, the voice of the people may too easily be drowned out by the voice of special interests masquerading as proponents of the public weal.●

TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE ACT OF 1985

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. WIRTH] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. WIRTH. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing, along with my colleague, Congressman JAMES J. FLORIO, of New Jersey, the Telecommunications Trade Act of 1985. This legislation deals with one of the most important areas of international trade, and one of the most important sectors of our economy—telecommunications.

The telecommunications industry is absolutely critical to the continued health, growth, and international competitiveness of the United States. Indeed, it is the economic infrastructure of the future—the brick and mortar foundation upon which this Nation can continue to build its economy in the information age. It is an area of international trade in which the United States provides products and services of extremely high quality, yet one where we have seen our trade posture seriously eroded in recent years—from a surplus of almost $1 billion in 1980 to a deficit of over $600 million in 1984.

This legislation is intended to deal with one of the key trade problems facing our telecomunications industry—restricted access to foreign markets. However, in setting forth a framework to open access by U.S. telecommunications suppliers to foreign markets, we must not simply slam the door to foreign competition in our market. Protectionist measures are not the answer. This bill rejects a protectionist approach. This moderate legislation is proactive—not reactive—intended and designed to open foreign markets through negotiations—not to close ours.

It represents a balanced, reasoned approach to the opening of international markets to the U.S. telecommunications industry. This legislation strikes a balance between negotiations and flexibility and, where markets are found restricted to U.S. firms, forceful remedial action.

As a result of a series of deregulatory decisions, the doors of the American telecommunications market have been thrown open to foreign competitors. Foreign companies enthusiastically entered our telecommunications market at unprecedented levels. But unfortunately, American telecommunications companies have been unable to equal our foreign competitors' success in exports.

Much of this problem is attributable to foreign markets that are characterized by government-owned telecommunications monopolies and a degree of government intrusion that substantially restricts U.S. access to those markets. Market access, however, is not the only problem affecting telecommunications trade efforts. The overvaluation of the dollar, for instance, has resulted in noncompetitive prices for telecommunications products sold abroad.

Moreover, American telecommunications businesses must rise to this trade challenge. They must recognize that the former domestic market has been transformed into a larger, global market, and they must engage in more extensive marketing efforts if they are going to cope with this new reality.

Our telecommunications industry is the world leader—it can compete successfully with anyone in the world, but it needs open access to foreign markets to compete; and we need to compete to sustain our economic and technological growth and development.

Government cannot improve our telecommunications trade posture singlehandedly. It cannot design, manufacture, or sell products. It can, though, create an environment conducive to exports—and that is the trust of this legislation.

Recognizing that negotiations are the most desirable method of achieving this open access to foreign markets, the bill contemplates a period of at least 18 months during which negotiations would occur. During this time, the Secretary of Commerce is directed to undertake a thorough investigation to determine whether U.S. companies are being denied equivalent access to a particular country's market.

The legislation is aimed at achieving market opportunities for U.S. suppliers in foreign markets on a level that is equivalent to the access afforded the foreign suppliers in the U.S. Foreign governments are not, however, required to have a market that is the mirror image of the American market. Instead, they must provide substantially equivalent access.

While much attention has recently been focused upon the trade imbalance with Japan, the bill does not focus upon one foreign market. Instead, it recognizes that efforts must be made in a number of foreign countries that are currently characterized by pervasive government intervention that bars or restricts access by American telecommunications suppliers.

In addition, the bill covers both telecommunications equipment and service. By including services, U.S. companies will be able to gain access to telephone lines for purposes of reselling them as part of a value-added network or some other value-added offering. Our trade negotiators must focus not only on telecommunications equipment, but also the provision of telecommunications services by U.S. firms—an area which can very much serve to improve our overall trade balance in this sector.

While the bill offers the administration flexibility in choosing what is the most desirable means to open foreign markets—and does not call for the automatic imposition of some overly harsh sanctions that may do more to disrupt free trade than open up foreign markets—it does require that the President take some concrete action to remove identified trade barriers—either through some action by the Federal Communications Commission in, for example, its registration program, or through remedies under existing trade law.

Now is the time to act to open foreign markets to American telecommunications suppliers. By enacting this legislation, we will be assuring that the United States maintains its position as the world leader in telecommunications—a position that will assure the future health and growth of our entire economy.

SUMMARY OF THE "TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE ACT OF 1985"

INTRODUCTION

Among the fastest growing areas of world trade is the telecommunications equipment and services industry. Still, the United States balance of trade in telecommunications has significantly deteriorated in recent years—from a surplus of almost $1 billion in 1980 to a deficit of over $600 million in 1984—in large part as a result of barriers to foreign telecommunications markets. This telecommunications trade trend must be reversed to preserve the health, growth and competitiveness of the U.S. economy and telecommunications industry. The continued growth of this key industry is critical to the development of new and innovative telecommunications equipment and services for the American consumer and the preservation of American jobs.

The telecommunications industry is vitally important to the U.S. economy and promises to be a major component of international trade in the future. It is an area where American products and services are of extremely high quality and consequently, legislation directed specifically at this sector is essential to the encouragement of continued U.S. technological and economic preeminence.

PURPOSE AND STRUCTURE OF BILL

The Telecommunications Trade Act of 1985 is designed to open up foreign markets to U.S. telecommunications equipment and service suppliers rather than closing the domestic American markets. Recognizing that negotiations are the most desirable method of achieving this open access to foreign markets, the bill contemplates a period of at least 18 months during which negotiations could go forward prior to the institution of any necessary remedial actions.

The legislation is aimed at achieving access to foreign markets on a level that is equivalent to the access afforded the foreign suppliers in the U.S. Foreign governments are not, however, required to have a market that is the mirror image of the American market. Instead, they must provide "substantially" equivalent access.

While much attention has recently been focused upon the trade imbalance with Japan, the bill does not focus upon one market. Instead, it recognizes that efforts must be made in a number of foreign markets that are currently characterized by pervasive government intervention that bars access to American telecommunications suppliers. Moreover, the bill covers both equipment that is designed for use in providing or receiving telephone service, and services such as the resale of private lines. By including services, U.S. service providers will be able to gain access to telephone lines for purposes of reselling them as part of a value added network or some other value added service offering.

After negotiations, if it is determined that a country is denying equivalent access, the President must take remedial measures to open the foreign market. Again, the theory of the bill is that negotiations aimed at opening up foreign markets is the preferred course, but if barriers continue, some firm action must be taken. The bill requires the President to direct the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) to take action which restricts or denies access to foreign suppliers of the foreign country. However, if the President takes action under the Trade Act of 1974 such as imposing duties or import restrictions—which until now he has not done—he would not be required to implement a sanction through the FCC.

PROCEDURES

The bill sets forth the following procedures for identifying foreign telecommunications markets that may be restricting participation for U.S. suppliers and the steps to be taken in order to open up those markets.

After contemplated negotiations occur, the Secretary of Commerce is required to determine whether any foreign country which might provide a substantial market for U.S. telecommunications suppliers is denying equivalent market access to U.S. suppliers. The Secretary's investigation must also consider the marketing efforts made by U.S. suppliers, the competitiveness of their prices (which requires an analysis as to the effect the value of the dollar is having on telecommunications trade), the impact of market access gained by United States companies by virtue of joint ventures or foreign manufacturing plants, and the impact on U.S. employment.

In addition to the Secretary's initial investigation, any interested person can petition the Secretary to find that a foreign market is denying equivalent access to U.S. suppliers.

If the Secretary finds that a foreign country is denying access, the President would be required to take enforcement action by directing the FCC to restrict access to the U.S. telecommunications market.

If the President takes action under the Trade Act of 1974, however, he would not be required to implement restrictions through the FCC.

The Secretary must conduct an annual review to determine whether the purposes of the Act are being fulfilled.

FINDINGS OF THE BILL

Congress finds that:

(1) trade in telecommunications equipment and services is one of the fastest growing areas of world trade and is expected to reach $700,000,000,000 by 1993;

(2) the United States balance of trade in telecommunications equipment has deteriorated significantly in recent years, falling from a surplus of nearly $1,000,000,000 in 1980 to a deficit in 1984 of more than $600,000,000;

(3) the United States deficit in telecommunications equipment trade is the result of an increase in imports into the United States market for telecommunications equipment that greatly exceeds exports by United States suppliers of telecommunications equipment;

(4) the increase in imports into the United States market by foreign suppliers of telecommunications equipment is in part a result of the open nature of the United States telecommunications market;

(5) the recent decline in the rate of growth of United States exports in telecommunications equipment is in part a result of barriers to participation in foreign telecommunications markets that are characterized by pervasive government intervention (including restrictive practices governing market access and governmental favoritism of indigenous foreign suppliers);

(6) open and unrestricted access to foreign telecommunications markets by United States telecommunications suppliers is necessary and critical for the continued economic health, growth, and international competitiveness of the United States telecommunications industry and to the sustained growth and expansion of the United States economy;

(7) the provision of universal telephone service at reasonable rates for all Americans is closely linked to the continued economic growth of the domestic telecommunications industry;

(8) the continued economic growth and international competitiveness of the United States telecommunications industry is important and vital to—

(A) the long-term research and development projects and programs of the United States telecommunications industry,

(B) the rapid development and introduction into the marketplace of new and innovative telecommunications equipment and services for American residential and business telecommunications users,

(C) the development of efficient, reliable, and state-of-the-art telecommunications networks to serve the needs of American telecommunications consumers, and

(D) the maintaining of employment opportunities for United States workers in the telecommunications industry;

(9) while negotiations should be continued, significant efforts have been made and some progress has been achieved by United States negotiators to open the Japanese telecommunications market to United States suppliers of telecommunications equipment and service;

(10) significant efforts to open other foreign telecommunications markets to United States suppliers must be given equal priority by the United States;

(11) negotiated access to foreign telecommunications markets for United States telecommunications suppliers should be the means to achieve increased exports in telecommunications equipment and services;

(12) United States policies should be directed to opening up foreign markets and not the closing of domestic United States markets; and

(13) unless negotiations between the United States and country to achieve open market access in that foreign country for United States telecommunications suppliers are successful, the United States should take action to restrict open access to the United States telecommunications market to foreign suppliers of that country as a means of achieving an open global market for telecommunications trade.

THE "TELECOMMUNICATIONS TRADE ACT OF 1985"

I. SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Sec. 1—Short title and table of contents

The bill is titled the "Telecommunications Trade Act of 1985."

Sec. 2—Findings and purposes

(a) Findings.—While telecommunications equipment and services are among the fastest growing areas of world trade, the United States' balance of trade has fallen significantly in recent years—from a surplus of $1 billion in 1980 to a deficit of over $600 million in 1984. This trade imbalance is largely the result of the open nature of the American telecommunications market in combination with restricted foreign markets that are characterized by pervasive government intervention.

Open and unrestricted access to foreign markets is essential to the continued health and growth of the U.S. telecommunications industry and the economy in general. Moreover, the international competitiveness of the telecommunications industry is critically necessary to assure continued research and development of innovative telecommunications equipment and services, to preserve employment opportunities in the U.S., and to maintain an efficient state-of-the-art telecommunications network.

The bill's objective, therefore, is to obtain open and unrestricted access to foreign markets in telecommunications equipment and services. This goal should be achieved by negotiation, if possible. However, if consultations between the United States and an individual country are not successful, then the legislation finds that the United States should take remedial action as necessary to reduce access to its telecommunications market to foreign suppliers from that country as a means of achieving open access to that foreign country's market.

(b) Purpose.—The purpose of the Act is to identify and reduce barriers to international trade affecting United States suppliers of telecommunications equipment and services.

Sec. 3—Definitions

Section 3 sets forth the pertinent definitions to the bill.

"Foreign supplier" is defined as an entity whose corporate headquarters or primary corporate control are located or based in a foreign country, but does not include the American subsidiaries or affiliates of a foreign corporation.

"United States supplier" is defined as any entity that has its headquarters and primary control located or based in the U.S. and is in the business of providing telecommunications equipment or services. This definition does not include the subsidiaries or affiliates of American companies operating overseas.

"Equivalent telecommunications market access" is defined in a way that does not require a foreign telecommunications market to be the mirror image of the U.S. market. Instead, the bill defines market access in a way that is intended to measure whether United States suppliers have opportunities in providing telecommunications equipment and services in a foreign country that are "substantially equivalent" to the opportunities that foreign suppliers of that country have in providing telecommunications equipment and services in the United States.

The bill covers both telecommunications equipment and services. "Telecommunications equipment" is equipment that is designed for use in providing or receiving telephone service and may be regulated by the Federal Communications Commission (FCC). This includes customer premises, switching and transmission equipment, and is not limited to that equipment which might be covered by an existing FCC registration program. "Telecommunications service" is the resale of telephone service which may be regulated by the FCC. The definition of service does not include the provision of enhanced services not regulated by the Commission as a result of the Computer II decision. This definition of services is intended to focus efforts on assuring that American companies can obtain access to telephone private lines and resell them as part of a value added network or other value added service offering.

Sec. 4—Finding by the Secretary

The legislation encourages negotiation over the next year as a means of opening up foreign telecommunications markets. Commencing in August 1986, the Secretary of Commerce is required to identify those foreign countries denying substantially equivalent access to United States telecommunications suppliers.

Any foreign country whose potential market for U.S. suppliers is not substantial may be excluded from this mandatory investigation. Notice of the investigation must be published and an opportunity for presentation of views including a public hearing must be provided. The Secretary will also consult with appropriate Federal agencies and committees of Congress.

Subsection (b) provides an alternative procedure for triggering Administration action to open up foreign markets by allowing any interested person to petition the Secretary to determine that a foreign country is not providing substantially equivalent telecommunications market access. The Secretary must consider the petition and decide whether or not to investigate. If the Secretary decides that the petition does not warrant an investigation, an explanation of the reasons for the denial must be submitted to the petitioner as well as Congress, and published in the Federal Register. Subsection (c) sets forth the procedures to be followed in an investigation that is triggered by the petition process.

Subsection (d) requires the Secretary within 60 days of publishing notice of the decision to investigate a market, to publish a preliminary finding as to whether a foreign market is providing substantially equivalent market access, as well as preliminary recommendations for any enforcement actions to be taken. Any interested parties will then be given 60 days to comment on the preliminary finding.

Subsection (e) requires the Secretary to consider all the comments received and make a final decision regarding the investigation within 120 days of publishing the decision to investigate. A recommendation as to any action to be taken must be submitted to the President and published in the Federal Register.

Subsection (f) provides certain key factors that the Secretary must consider when investigating access to a foreign telecommunications market. The Secretary must consider; (1) the marketing efforts and the competitiveness of the prices of U.S. suppliers in the particular foreign market; (2) the access to the foreign markets afforded to U.S. suppliers through joint ventures and foreign manufacturing plants; (3) the success of U.S. suppliers in gaining access in the foreign country, compared to the success of U.S. telecommunications suppliers in other foreign countries and in the U.S.; and, (4) the impact on employment in the U.S. telecommunications industry.

Sec. 5—Presidential determination

Should the Secretary determine that a foreign country is denying market access to U.S. suppliers that is substantially equivalent to the access afforded the foreign suppliers in the U.S., the President must determine the proper action to achieve equivalent access. Within 60 days of the Secretary's finding, the President must direct the FCC to implement the appropriate action.

Sec. 6—Federal Communications Commission implementation

Section 6 requires the FCC to implement the action directed by the President within 30 days from the President's decision. In implementing the President's order, the FCC must provide public notice.

Sec. 7—Circumstances under which action not required

The President would not be required to implement action through the FCC if he instead took action under section 301 of the Trade Act of 1974. Under the Trade Act, the President could; (1) suspend or withdraw from a trade agreement with that country; (2) impose duties or other import restrictions on telecommunications equipment or services from that country; (3) restrict the terms of access authorizations from telecommunications suppliers from that country; or, (4) deny authorization to foreign suppliers of that country.

Consequently, the bill in effect gives the President the option of implementing enforcement actions through the FCC or through the existing trade remedies. He must, however, utilize one or the other.

Sec. 8—Action under this act not exclusive

Section 8 makes clear that the President's authority is not limited to directing the FCC to implement enforcement access. Instead, the President may in addition to any enforcement action involving the FCC, take steps under any other law that is designed to achieve equivalent telecommunications market access.

Sec. 9—Report

Section 9 requires that the President inform the Congress and publish in the Federal Register any action to be taken along with the objectives to be achieved. If the President's action is different than that recommended by the Secretary of Commerce, the President must include in the report an explanation for the difference in the action taken.

Sec. 10—Monitoring the effect of actions

The Secretary must annually review the action taken in order to determine whether the action is fulfilling the purposes of the Act and to analyze the action's effect on interstate and foreign commerce. The Secretary must report these findings to the President and Congress.

If the President finds that the action is achieving its objectives, the President can suspend or modify the action. If the President takes such action, he must notify Congress, provide an explanation of the suspension or modification and publish notice in the Federal Register. If, conversely, the action taken is not having the desired effect, the President can take further action.

In addition to the review of the effectiveness of the actions, the Secretary must annually review the markets of those countries that were excluded from the initial investigation on the basis that the potential market in those countries would not be substantial. If after review, the Secretary finds that a country has a substantial market for U.S. equipment and services, the Secretary must conduct an investigation of that country.

Sec. 11—Amendment of the Communications Act of 1934

Section 11 amends Title VII of the Communications Act by adding a new section. The new section gives the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) explicit authority to implement any of the telecommunications market access enforcement action that the President orders under the Telecommunications Trade Act.

The new section also requires that the Commission issue regulations setting forth the procedures to be used in implementing the President's orders. While the Commission may specify the types of actions available to the President, the President's discretion will not be limited to the options set forth by the FCC.

Sec. 12—Effective date

The bill contemplates a period for negotiations to occur prior to any enforcement action being able to be taken pursuant to this legislation.

Consequently, the Act takes effect on July 1, 1986.●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SKELTON] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, this morning I was out of town on official business and I returned after the vote on S. 960. Had I been able to be present, I would have voted "yea."●

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LELAND] is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I was unable to cast my "yea" vote today on the conference report on S. 960, the foreign assistance authorization. I was unavoidably detained outside the office on official business and literally arrived on the House floor seconds after the voting on the conference report had concluded.

It is inevitable that there will be differing perspectives on legislation as complex and comprehensive as the foreign assistance authorization. As chairman of the Select Committee on Hunger, I am particularly concerned that this body pass legislation that directly and efficiently benefits the poor, the hungry, and the malnourished people of the world. That should be—and must be—the goal of any true Foreign Assistance Program.

For far too long, in the guise of protecting U.S. security abroad, the focus of our foreign aid policy has been military assistance at the expense of developmental and economic assistance. It is ironic that while millions of people are dying in drought-striken countries, billions of dollars are authorized for military assistance to foreign nations.

I am greatly distressed that in order to pass a bill which helps the poor and malnourished of this world I must vote for a bill which also authorizes billions of dollars in foreign military assistance. The foreign assistance bill should symbolize our hope for peace and growth, not our fear of war and destruction.

The conference report does, however, provide us with a starting point. It reflects our Nation's commitment to developing countries and our responsibility to the needs of the poor and hungry of the world.

This bill helps us reach out to thousands of Third World children who are ill because they lack food and proper medical care. Investments in basic primary health care are among the most cost-effective means to reduce death rates, improve productivity, and promote development in less-developed nations. Maintaining funding for health aid projects, providing a modest increase in the child survival fund and supporting UNICEF's primary health care revolution—all included in this legislation—are investments crucial in meeting our goal of reducing the suffering of these children.

The reduction and elimination of hunger and famine will only result with the improvement of food production. This bill extends support to vital agricultural development projects managed by AID, international organizations, and American private and volunteer organizations.

It also provides support for continued U.S. participation in the International Fund for Agriculture Development [IFAD], a multilateral organization helping farmers in the poorest countries to feed themselves. IFAD has proven itself and we can be very proud of its accomplishments. It has been able to reach the poor farmers of Africa, Asia, and Latin America, giving them the ability to help themselves.

The vigil to end hunger must continue. We cannot falter in our efforts to avert future famine situations, help those affected return to self-sufficiency and dignity, reduce hunger and malnutrition, and remedy the massive poverty so prevalent throughout the world. That is what we must address in our foreign aid program. And that is why this conference report has my support.

Again, I sincerely regret I was unable to cast my vote on such an important piece of legislation.●

NEGOTIATE THE RELEASE OF THE SEVEN HOSTAGES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, yesterday, Tuesday, July 30, along with some other Members of the House, I had the privilege of hosting a meeting of some of the families of the seven American hostages now held in Lebanon. During the course of about 4 hours they had an opportunity to meet with the press, to meet with about about a dozen Members of Congress, to meet with the State Department, to meet with a representative from the White House who came from the National Security Council and to discuss their concerns and frustrations and brought to us some very interesting observations. As I observed the comments from the families of these hostages, it occurred to me there is a point of departure with approach of the administration and that point of departure is this. The families want the administration to be in communication with the Government of Kuwait, with the hope of negotiating an exchange of those prisoners held in Kuwait for the seven American hostages held in Lebanon.

□ 2330

Let me point out that the prisoners held in Kuwait were convicted for bombing the French and American Embassies, and I believe seven or eight people were killed, and maybe two or three dozen people were injured.

But the families also point out that some of the people held in Kuwait are related to the captors of the American hostages in Lebanon. The administration has taken the position that they do not negotiate with or for prisoners of a terrorist and, therefore, they stand on principle. The families of the Americans believe that because these are Americans and their lives are so important to us that our Government should negotiate, and so that is the point of departure.

But in the course of discussing their concerns with us, they brought some documents which I think the Members of the House would be interested in reading or hearing. First was a letter from the Rev. Benjamin Weir. On February 15, 1985, Reverend Weir wrote to Dr. Oscar McCloud, and this is what Reverend Weir had to say. I quote:

FEBRUARY 15, 1985.

DEAR DR. OSCAR MCCLOUD: I am writing to ask you to do everything in your means to demand that the U.S. government intervene effectively with the government of Kuwait, because I understand the U.S. government is not in fact acting effectively to secure the release of prisoners held there. I am assured that once those prisoners are set free, I and others will be released at the same time. This requires direct and effective action by the U.S. government with the government of Kuwait.

The men who hold me insist they will refuse mediation or interference by any third party, Syria or other party. They are opposed to Syria and will not deal with them, nor any other party. If such interference is attempted. I am told our lives are in extreme danger and that the place we are held will be blown up with us. So please ask the U.S. government to take this matter seriously.

Sincerely yours,

BENJAMIN W. WEIR.

This apparently is in the handwriting of Reverend Weir. In fact, I have reason to believe it is his handwriting, because this letter and another one, which I shall read in a minute, was given to me by Mrs. Carol Weir. She wrote "I have given permission for this letter to be released." I wanted to be sure that she was aware that I intended to bring this letter to the attention of the Members, and as I want to point out to the Members, it is written in Reverend Weir's handwriting.

He writes to Mrs. Weir on April 10, 1985:

DEAR CAROL: I am well and your two messages have been received. I am here because of American political policy in support of Israel, and because of opposition to it others are prisoners in Kuwait. Thus far the U.S. government has not responded positively, but is able to do so. I ask you to do what you can to persuade the U.S. government to put pressure on the government of Kuwait to release those prisoners. I understand that if the U.S. government does not put pressure on Kuwait to release those prisoners then my life will be in danger and I will hold the U.S. government and President Reagan responsible. I ask you to act quickly because it is very hard for me to continue in this situation.

Sincerely

BEJAMIN M. WEIR.

APRIL 10, 1985.

Attending this session we had yesterday, which lasted from 9 to 1 o'clock, was Mr. Jerry Levin. You recall Mr. Levin was the reporter from Cable News Network who was released or who escaped from the Syrians sometime last year. And he had a statement which he read to the media, and I thought it was of some significance to bring it to the attention of the Members of the House. Again I asked Mr. Levin's permission to read this statement to the Members of the House.

I quote:

They are being called the "forgotten seven." Forgotten by whom? The public? I don't think so. I think they were ignored publicly by the government and the press until recently, so that the public knew very little about their situation, certainly not enough that it could be blamed for forgetting them. There is no question that the Administration knew plenty about the facts of our captivity, but refused to share them with the American people through the press. Rarely has one heard an official, or seen or read a story that discussed the reason for their kidnappings.

In fact the reason for the seven's ordeal is similar to the reason for the ordeal of the hijacked hostages. In both cases it has been for exchange of prisoners. The Administration knew that exchange was the demand in our case over a year ago, yet it would not share that information with the public. Last July the government was informed in videotaped messages that our lives and freedom depended on the lives and freedom of the prisoners in Kuwait. Our captors required me and the two other Americans who had been kidnapped up to that time to make the tapes. The prisoners in Kuwait are seventeen Arabs—mostly Shiite Moslems—convicted in Kuwait in March 1984 of the bombings there of the American and French embassies in December 1983. Five people were killed and eighty six wounded in the explosions. Our government was asked to intercede with Kuwait to release the prisoners, three of whom have been sentenced to death.

Lacking a clear idea of what the seven had been held for, the public has not been energised as it was in the hijacking crisis to communicate to the Administration and elected representatives its desire that the government do everything necessary to resolve the crisis as quickly as possible through the reciprocal release of the American hostages for the Arab prisoners. Without that public expression of concern, I think it is likely that the government will continue to treat this crisis differently from the hijacking crisis; and these men will continue to suffer, as did I, in squalid solitary confinement, locked away in a dark room, a wrist secured to the wall with a chain too short to permit standing. They will not be allowed to exercise. They will be blindfolded much of the time, always when their captors are present. They will be given little to eat—maybe seven to nine hundred calories a day; so they will lose weight and become physically weak. I lost thirty pounds. They will not be allowed to communicate with the outside world, except to write messages dictated by their captors; and they won't be allowed to receive any messages from the outside either. They will continue to suffer from the unrelenting strain and shock of isolation, separation, and uncertainty.

Some of these men have been in captivity for more than a year. The hijacking crisis lasted less than three weeks. There is an important reason why the hijacking hostages are free and the seven are not. The government, out of the glare of public attention, has apparently been unwilling to foster an exchange. It is apparently standing firm on the kind of principle the public, out of concern for the lives of its fellow citizens, forced the Administration to abandon quickly during the hijack crisis. Public pressure convinced the Administration that it had to work energetically for a reciprocal release of prisoners while maintaining its public posture of standing firm against terrorism. If it could do that in the case of the thirty nine, it should have done it in the case of the seven.

It is not pleasant to think of convicted extremist murderers being set free; but it is much more unpleasant to think of innocent Americans wasting away in chains, at the very least or, at the worst, being sacrificed because of the highly debatable components of an inconsistently observed principle.

Let no one be swayed by the argument that terrorism will increase if the prisoners in Kuwait are set free. If that argument could be properly suspended during the hijacking crisis, it should be suspended now for the same reason; American lives are at stake. Terrorism has been and is on the increase. It will continue to increase whether the extremist prisoners in Kuwait are martyred or not. And that condition will exist so long as the Administration is presuasive in convincing the American people that the focus of concern should be primarily on eliminating terrorists and not on eliminating the root causes of terrorism.

Now that the American people are becoming aware that the stakes in the case of the seven are quite similar to the stakes in the case of the thirty-nine, I hope they won't permit the Administration to ignore the similarities and act accordingly. If the public is successful in getting the Administration's attention, then I think these unfortunate men could be home soon. If not, then I am afraid, they will be locked away for a long long time.

Mr. Speaker, that was Jerry Levin, one of the freed hostages, who now is a correspondent for Cable News Network.

Now subsequent to the press conference, Mr. Speaker, there was a closed meeting with Members of Congress and the State Department and the White House. Again Mr. Levin was called upon to make a case for the seven courageous American hostages in Lebanon. Again I wish to quote from Mr. Levin. He stated:

It is a privilege and a relief to be here talking to you today, when you consider the possible alternative. I might still be a hostage; and my wife, Sis, might still be suffering from the governmental and press inattention that has afflicted for too many months the families of the seven Americans still being held hostage.

When Sis went public last fall, after being submissively silent for six months, she said, "I wish this was someone else talking." Even though she felt speaking out was necessary, doing so worried her more than anything she had ever done before. Going public with the facts of my captivity and the captivity of the two other Americans who had been taken hostage in Lebanon up to that time was an awesome even frightening step because she proposed to do what had been strongly resisted and advised against by almost everyone she knew at the State Department, many colleagues in the press, and members of our family. But she was equally worried by what she perceived as the Administration's and a considerable portion of the press's failure to devote much attention to what had been until then an almost untouchable topic. She was against silence on the issue, because being submissively silent for six months had not worked. We were still hostages. In all likelihood, she believed, more would be taken. She was right. A year and a half later, the number of hostages in the group, of which I was possibly the first, has risen, we believe, to be seven Americans, two Frenchmen, and one Kuwaiti. Sis and I can never feel completely freed from the horror of our experience as long as any of them is held hostage. So we continue to work with most of the families trying to help them keep the story of their men's plight, and the reason for it, before the public.

They've been called the "Forgotten Seven." In truth, I, my wife, and most of the families involved feel they've been the "ignored seven." Six of them are probably still alive. The fate of the seventh is unsure. Most of the hostages, I believe, were and still are being held by terrorists who want to exchange them for seventeen Arabs, most of them Shiite Moslems convicted by a Kuwait court in the December 1983 bombings of the United States and French embassies there. Five people were killed and eighty six wounded in those explosions. Three of the convicted terrorists are Lebanese. Two of them have been sentenced to death, and they are reportedly relatives of some of the terrorists who took me and the others captive.

While the United States and Kuwait have been standing firm against the terrorists' demand that the prisoners in Kuwait be freed, the terrorists have been relentlessly upping the ante.

But the horrifying facts of our captivity, unlike the telling of the ordeal of the hostages on flight 847, were not widely known or frequently reported. Except in hostage home towns, there was little if any follow up to keep our story alive. So people forgot quickly, if they ever knew.

The Administration refused to be drawn into making even remotely comprehensive public statements about the growing crisis until the middle of last May, seventeen months after it began. At that time the captors released pictures of six of the hostages to an Arabic newspaper in Beirut along with their first public statement of what they wanted. Until then, their demands had only been communicated privately to the hostage families and the United States Government; but the government did not tell the public through the press what it knew. The families in frustration made the contents of their messages available to the public through the press. But the government never felt compelled to offer public corroboration. So the impact of the family's revelations was fleeting.

That to me is a shocking fact. I can tell you it is hard for the families of the other hostages to comprehend. I know, because there is an informal network of hostage families and friends. The network did not exist until Sis broke with government, press, and family advisors and went public seven hard months after my capture. She found a home on Today, Good Morning America, CBS Morning News, USA TODAY, The New York Times, The Detroit Free Press, and the Birmingham News. That was about "it"; but once hearing, seeing or reading Sis's appeals, the families quickly made contact and found that they had more than hostages in common. For one thing, they had been discouraged by the government from contacting each other. The families had also been advised by the government not to speak out. And it failed to even give periodic updates on the situation to hostage families. In other words, it didn't even provide simple hand holding, something that was done weekly during the Iranian hostage crisis and was done again during the Flight 847 crisis. The State Department's own manual on "Hostage Negotiation," published February 1984, a month before I was kidnapped, says "a family liaison function is vitally important. The families of those who are victims of terrorist incidents need a great deal of support and assistance during the crisis. They need most of all to be kept informed of what is happening and what is being done to ensure the safety of their loved one." That was not the case with the families of the seven remaining American hostages or with Sis when I was one. It is almost as if the manual had been written on the wind.

But until recently most of Congress had been equally inattentive. Most of the families suffered rebuff and rejection. Peggy Say, the sister of hostage Terry Anderson, has horror stories to tell. The relatives of Father Lawrence Martin Jenco had to organize a congressional blitz of their own to get attention. Sis's Senator, Howell Heflin, a long time friend of the family, indeed his son is a member of her late father's and brother's law firm in Birmingham, Alabama, would not and has not to this day returned her phone calls. Yet the doors were wide open to the families of the hijack victims. Fortunately because of the hijack crisis the other families have been able to ride piggy back as it were, on the coattails of the attention that crisis gained, to a position of heightened visibility and concern; but what an agonizing way to have achieved it.

Why was there such little attention? I think in part because the government was successful in persuading many editors and members of Congress that attention might get us killed. but the press rushed in undeterred to cover the Flight 847 story and the Iranian hostages story, and the government rushed to comply with the press's need for information, and congressmen began to speak out. It makes the hostage families think that quantity is a deciding factor in the degree of executive, legislative, and press concern, if any, as to whether or not those entities will devote much attention to this kind of story. Seven Americans, in the same kind of peril as the thirty-nine on Flight 847 apparently weren't enough to qualify. How many hostages does it take to make a crisis that the press and government will discuss? What is the magic number? Ten hostages? Twenty? Certainly not seven.

I think the Administration should have been pressed to state the basic facts of our captivity when it knew them for sure for the first time. That was in early July of last year. Releasing the basic facts of our captivity not have harmed us. It is hardly known that the captors delivered their demands to the State Department nearly a year ago. But the Administration chose not to make them public and never has. The fact that the captors wanted to exchange me and the two other Americans they had rounded up by then for the seventeen prisoners in Kuwait was communicated in videotaped messages our captors wrote and required us to make on the 5th of July. Our messages clearly stated that our lives and freedom depended upon the lives and freedom of the prisoners in Kuwait. But the Administration did not share with the public the basic facts of our captivity.

Reporting only the facts of our captivity and the terrorists' demands would not have been giving in to terrorism, as advocates of quiet diplomacy and the Administration's tall in the saddle stance would have you believe. It would have simply been the act of defining the problem for the public which has a legitimate and crucial need to be informed.

So in this situation, we had a citizenry that did not have enough information to inform its elected representatives and the Administration as to its feelings in the matter. Sis and I and many other well intentioned loyal Americans think that news coverage-publicity, if you will—is protection. It is what has helped get us out of spots created by carelessly monitored Administrations before. I'm sure it will again. But the Administration's public emphasis has been to focus entirely on terrorism. Now terrorism is an issue which certainly needs to be addressed. But the Administration seems to want us to believe that terrorism is the sole program. But it is not. Terrorism is a sympton, not the disease. And if the Administration insists on simply treating the sympton, the disease won't be cured.

As far as my own treatment was concerned, it improved a bit late last year. And I think publicity had something to do with it. At the time it got better, I wondered, why. When I reached freedom, I found that it improved when Sis was in Damascus last November speaking publicly about the need for peaceful unthreatening dialogue and negotiation that might help tame some of the hostility between people in the Middle East and their American counterparts as all levels of society. She explained that a truthful reporter was more valuable on the outside than in. A worried woman's lonely trip into the capital of what is conventionally considered a nation of hostile people was happily not ignored. Her story and what she was saying were carried in the Arab and American press. Her message reached President Assad's ears. He responded with a message to Sis through his foreign minister that Syria would work for my release. Her message of peace and genuine friendship also reached my captors ears. How do I know? They told me on Christmas eve. That was just about the first and last time they were ever that open with me about anything going on in the world.

At this time, we think the key message, in so far as the seven hostages are concerned, is no longer simply that they need to be remembered. They finally are. What needs to be clearly understood is why they are being held, and what it will take to get them freed. I believe that the captors will accept nothing less than the return of the prisoners in Kuwait. Now that the Administration has proven that it can get around the problem of officially saving face while unofficially doing what it says publicly it can't do, I think the public, not to mention the families, ought to be asking why the same benevolent sleight of hand should not be applied in this situation.

Arranging a reciprocal release, despite what some people have already said, will not be the cause of an increase in terrorism. Terrorism is going to continue to escalate, in all likelihood, whether or not the prisoners in Kuwait are released, simply because the momentum of our mistakes in the Middle East will, I think, carry on well past the point where we may begin to reverse it. And, of course, at this point there are not any signs to make us think that a reversal is in progress. I recognize that this is a highly controversial point of view. But it is one that should be widely discussed. However, since so few people have been aware what the stakes are, they have been mute in the matter in a way they were not in the hijack crisis when they knew what the captors wanted.

I think the judgements that went into the decisions not to publish in the case of the seven need to be examined as thoroughly as the exhaustive examinations of the decisions to publish, publish, and publish the facts, the surrounding facts, and the facts surrounding the surrounding facts of the hijack crisis. And, I think, the judgements surrounding the Administration's refusal to discuss this crisis publicly as thoroughly as it did the earlier one needs to be examined and evaluated also.

Those are the words of Mr. Jerry Levin, and I bring it to the attention of the Members of the House.

Let me close by expressing my thanks to those Members who participated in the session with some of the families of the hostages and to express my deep admiration for the courage that the families have displayed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the subject of my special order today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

FRANCES HOLLEMAN BREATHITT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. HUBBARD] is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment and congratulate my colleague and friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. DYMALLY], for his excellent presentation, for his concern, which, I might add, is the concern of all of the Members of the House of Representatives, for the seven Americans held hostage in Lebanon. Congratulations to you, my colleague, for taking this time to remind us again that these are, indeed, men who are too forgotten, too ignored.

Mr. Speaker, I take this time to pay tribute to an outstanding lady—Frances Holleman Breathitt, who died of cancer July 11 at Georgetown University Hospital.

Mrs. Breathitt, wife of former Kentucky Gov. Edward T. "Ned" Breathitt, was a member of the Kennedy Center Board of Directors and was a member and Sunday school teacher at Metropolitan Memorial United Methodist Church in Washington.

I'm proud that Frances Holleman Breathitt was born and raised in Mayfield, KY, which is my hometown.

When Edward T. "Ned" Breathitt was elected Governor of Kentucky in 1963 western Kentuckians were proud that a popular Hopkinsville, KY, attorney and former State legislator was the first Governor from the western part of our State ever elected.

We were also proud that western Kentucky's Frances Holleman Breathitt was Kentucky's first lady for 4 years.

Mrs. Breathitt was known to Kentuckians as a talented, pretty, conscientious, and dedicated person. She was described in those terms when she attended Western Kentucky University, graduated from the University of Kentucky, and married Ned Breathitt on December 20, 1948.

Mrs. Breathitt was a helpful and devoted wife and mother. I admit I'm prejudiced, because I truly liked and admired Frances Breathitt, but I sincerely believe Frances Breathitt was the most admired and respected first lady in Kentucky during this 20th century.

At age 58, a 3-year battle with cancer finally took the life of a brave Frances Breathitt.

The thousands of Kentuckians who knew her, especially those at Hopkinsville where Ned and Frances Breathitt were at home prior to his being elected Governor, mourned her death.

In recent years, former Governor and Mrs. Breathitt have resided in Washington, DC. Ned Breathitt is an effective lobbyist and public affairs official for Norfolk Southern Corp. in Washington.

My wife Carol and I attended a beautiful and impressive service—"A Service of Thanksgiving for the life of Frances Holleman Breathitt"—on Tuesday, July 23, at Washington's Metropolitan Memorial United Methodist Church.

Her minister, Dr. William A. Holmes, praised the Christian principles which Frances Breathitt exemplified and told of her courageous and optimistic fight against cancer.

Frances Breathitt was also praised at the memorial service by longtime friends Ann Blessing Bray—her college roommate at University of Kentucky—of Harlan, KY, Roger L. Stevens, Chairman of the Board of the Kennedy Center, and U.S. Senator MARK HATFIELD of Oregon. Senator HATFIELD's remarks about Frances Breathitt were especially memorable.

Frances Breathitt was especially proud of her four talented and handsome children—Mary Frances Breathitt and Linda Breathitt, both of Washington, and Mrs. Susan Brickman of Dallas; and a son, Edward T. Breathitt III of Dallas.

Other survivors are two brothers, M. L. Holleman of Jackson, MS, and Wallace Holleman of Nashville, TN; a sister, Mrs. Harold [Mary Anna] West of Nashville; and two grandchildren, Blake and Jennifer Brickman of Dallas.

I ask my colleagues to share "A Tribute by Her Friends" which appeared in the program of the recent memorial service for Frances Holleman Breathitt.

It is as follows:

What we say here all too briefly is not the reflection of an emotional lament. It is our concept of Fran, Frannie, or Frankie, as we variously called her, when she was in our midst, enriching our lives. She will continue to do so for many years to come.

If there were defects we should record, we would do so. The truth is we do not know them, or they were so overshadowed by her virtues that they went unnoticed.

There was a tenderness wrapped in strength such as we have rarely seen. She showered these twin virtues upon her family without denying us our share. Her devotion to family was absolute and uncompromising. How often we heard a comment or two, ever so brief but profound, of her parents, her brother and sister. How often we observed her dedication to her beloved husband, her four treasured children, and her obsessive delight with her precious two grandchildren. All their joys and, inevitably, their sorrows became intimately hers. She protected them in their concerns with unselfish wisdom.

Hers was an almost silent, self-effacing way of leading and inspiring. There was an innate modesty balanced by a subtle self-confidence. Never was an unnecessary or unkind word uttered. She was forever learning by listening and watching, but her occasional disagreement would never be withheld or concealed if she numbered you among her friends.

She was endowed with a deep religious faith, quietly pursued but without the slightest intolerance toward others less believing.

Her long, final struggle for survival—and how she loved life—became her finest hour. Her inner strength, her uncommon valor, her rare unselfishness, her deep faith, confronted by the brutal test of agonizing pain and uncertainty, reached their ultimate climax. She has left a legacy of leadership and inspiration for others to inherit.

We have mentioned her happy reverence for the memory of her parents. She now becomes the object of that reverence for her children, her grandchildren, and those yet unborn.

A young amateur poet, with an Irish whimsy and humor that Frances so richly possessed, described many years ago how we view our friendship with her:

"We have touched the hem of a glory."

(c) SENSE OF THE CONGRESS.—The consultant's study and findings, conclusions, recommendations, or comments by the consultant or the Commission under this Act with respect to such study should not serve as the basis for any legal conclusion in a lawsuit against the government.

By Mr. WALKER:

—In section 7, on page 12, after line 6, insert the following new subsection and renumber succeeding sections accordingly:

"(b)(2) Such study shall include and measure the impact on wages in similar jobs negotiated under collective bargaining agreements."

REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

In compliance with Public Law 601, 79th Congress, title III, Regulation of Lobbying Act, section 308(b), which provides as follows:

(b) All information required to be filed under the provisions of this section with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate shall be compiled by said Clerk and Secretary, acting jointly, as soon as practicable after the close of the calendar quarter with respect to which such information is filed and shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate jointly submit their report of the compilation required by said law and have included all registrations and quarterly reports received.

REGISTRATIONS

The following registrations were submitted for the second calendar quarter 1985:

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This page (page 1) is designed to supply identifying data; and page 2 (on the back of this page) deals with financial data.

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following quarterly reports were submitted for the second calendar quarter 1985:

(NOTE.—The form used for reporting is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This page (page 1) is designed to supply identifying data; and page 2 (on the back of this page) deals with financial data.

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

Year: 19.....

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

PAGE 1

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "None" in the space following the number.

QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following reports for the first calendar quarter of 1985 were received too late to be included in the published reports for that quarter:

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This page (page 1) is designed to supply identifying data; and page 2 (on the back of this page) deals with financial data.

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

Year: 19.....

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

[Omitted in printing]

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "None" in the space following the number.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

STRENGTHENING DEVELOPING INSTITUTIONS

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the attention of the Members of the House of Representatives a statement regarding title III of the Higher Education Act.

The statement was delivered by Dr. Stanley H. Smith, president, Shaw University, Raleigh, NC, to the Subcommittee on Postsecondary Education of the House Committee on Education and Labor on July 30, 1985.

The statement follows:

STRENGTHENING DEVELOPING INSTITUTIONS

(By Dr. Stanley H. Smith)

Mr. Chairman and other honorable and distinguished members of this very important Sub-committee on Post-Secondary Education, commendations are certainly very much in order for the roles that you are playing in dealing with educational issues, particularly Title III, which have impacted and will continue to impact on the future vitality, viability and competitiveness of this great Democratic country of ours.

My name is Stanley Hugh Smith. I have been president for seven years of Shaw University in Raleigh, North Carolina, an institution of Higher Education that has been in existence for 120 years, founded in 1865. I am a graduate of a Historically Black College, Fisk University, and received my Ph.D from Washington State University in Pullman, Washington, where I was elected to the academically prestigious Phi Beta Kappa Society. I have held administrative and teaching positions at Livingstone College, Tuskegee Institute, Meharry Medical College and Fisk University, all Historically Black Universities, before assuming the deanship of The College of Human Resources at Southern Illinois, a comprehensive University of more than 26,000 students.

From this relatively secure administrative position, I answered the call to become president of Shaw University at a time when this College was experiencing some financial problems. I am currently a member of The Commission on Colleges of The Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, the accrediting agency for The South Eastern Region of the United States.

With the firm belief that my educational background, training and experiences are typical of the more than 100 presidents and Chancellors of Historically Black Colleges and Universities, I will hereby attempt an evaluative assessment of the current operation of Title III, relying primarily on the methodology of a case study/participant observation approach. I will then suggest and recommend ways and means whereby this honorable and distinguished sub-committee can, conceivably, through legislation, enhance and strengthen the efficiency and effectiveness with which the primary beneficiaries of this legislative effort can be served.

Although some emphasis will herein be placed on the Title III experiences of a particular institution of Higher Education, inferences can, and will, safely be drawn with respect to their appropriateness and applicability to other educational institutions similarly structured and situated.

It is important in this context to be reminded that legislation establishing Title III—Strengthening Developing Institutions—was enacted in 1965 and had as its purpose "to assist in raising the academic quality of Colleges which have the desire and potential to make a substantial contribution to higher education resources of our nation, but which, for financial and other reasons are struggling for survival and are isolated from the main currents of academic life".

A "developing institution" is further defined as one which "is making a reasonable effort to improve the quality of its teaching and administrative staffs and its student services".

In the 1980 amendment, the program purpose was further clarified as "To improve the academic quality, institutional management and fiscal stability of eligible institutions, in order to increase their self-sufficiency and strengthen their capability to make substantial contributions to the higher education resources of the nation" and further:

"To assist an institution to plan, develop or implement activities that promise to strengthen the institution, in the areas of faculty development; funds and administrative management; development and improvement of academic programs . . ."

Title III, through the foresight and insight of this Congress is, therefore, the largest program of the U.S. Department of Education that makes grants directly to colleges and universities to develop their faculties, curricula and endowments designed to strengthen small institutions with weak and inadequate financial bases. In accordance with the sense of the act as discussed during the deliberations by Representative Edith Green of Oregon, Historically Black Colleges were to be the primary beneficiaries of Title III legislation to facilitate their accomplishing the referenced purposes. New categories of colleges have since been added without any significant increase in the level of funding. The share of HBCU's of Title III funding has decreased by approximately 50 percent since the program was initiated. The funding level even when conceived primarily for HBCU's, was not adequate to achieve the basic aims and objectives of Title III. Under these conditions, the possibilities and chances of moving from a developing to a developed status were, therefore, made very difficult. These goals were made even more unattainable by the significant increase in the operational cost of these institutions of Higher Education because of the spiralling cost of inflation. It is indeed ironic under these circumstances that some decision makers are wondering why these educational institutions are not now developed.

It is especially ironic that some decision makers consider this level of inadequate funding as overfunding and, therefore, seek, whenever and wherever possible, to reduce the funding level even further.

The irony is intensified when cognizance is taken that education is indeed the objective reality. The decision-making methodology should therefore be so documented and explicated that decision makers at varying points of time, should only have to follow the clearly defined rules of the games and arrive at similar, if not identical, decisions. For example, "developing institutions", as a concept, should be so operationally defined that all appropriate persons should agree on precise stages of development. Defining the universe to be measured would lead to the logical conclusion that a cluster of variables, to be teased out through multivariate analysis, will have to be taken into consideration in determining eligibility of institutions rather than reliance only on the Pell Grant.

Psychometric, sociometric and econmetric models should be developed and replicated identifying different typologies and their unique configuration of variables that constitute different funding levels for the attainment of the desired and expected goals. For example, funding levels structured to reach certain goals are not the same for a public institution where the State makes annual or semi-annual appropriations to the public institution contrasted with a private non-profit educational institution without such an appropriation. Questions of equity must also be raised concerning State appropriations to public institutions within the same State. There are important differences even among private educational institutions in terms of those institutions where tuition and fees constitute approximately 60 percent of operating expenses contrasted with all the Historically Black educational institutions where they are less than 50 per cent and if increased, will exclude significant proportions of the present consumers of these educational services.

Also ignored in the legislative conceptualization and the decision-making process is the great differential in the frequency of awards of contracts and grants to those colleges and universities that do not depend on Title III funding as a basic and fundamental dimension of institutional development. These institutions that do not rely on Title III funding, derive considerable revenues from contracts and grants from different federal agencies. It is not unusual to find these institutions carrying 85% to 90% Indirect Cost rate which goes directly to the educational institution for its general operating expenses. For example, such a university or colleage that has approved proposal funding for $500,000 for personnel could conceivably receive an additional $435,000 in indirect cost. This category of institutional development is at the seminal stages at most Title III funding, particularly HBCU schools. Some concern for equity should be evidenced in this regard.

It is additionally ironic that there are inconsistencies in the funding levels of institutions whose activities are congruent with the purpose and goals of the referenced educational institution and also consistent with the national goals and priorities espoused by the executive and legislative branches of government.

The case university in question submitted a proposal in 1982 under the Strengthening Program of Title III for funding for five years. This proposal was ranked, using criteria developed by the U.S. Department of Education in the top 10 percent in the nation and was subsequently funded. Two critical components of the package were a Comprehensive Long Range Plan and the Proposal for Funding. Long Range Planning was such a critical part of the package that instructions to Field Readers by the Department of Education staffers indicated that if the Long Range Plan did not meet the stringent criteria developed by the Department, that the Proposal for funding would not be read and considered for funding. The university Long Range Plan and Proposal were highly ranked.

Yet in 1984-85, the current year, the University requested $587,624 to conduct the program as outlined in the original proposal. In November 1984, after the Grant Year had begun and after the University had made contractual arrangements with faculty, staff, and consultants for the 1984-85 year, it received a list of "Noted Exceptions" and an announcement of a change in the Program Officer assigned to it. The University replied to these "Noted Exceptions" and in March, received information from the Grants Officer sustaining the Exceptions and reducing the Grant by $142,272, a twenty-four percent (24%) reduction.

For 1985-86, the University submitted a request for $488,406 and was recently notified that the recommended level of funding is $266,934, which represents a forty-five percent (45%) reduction for the 1985-86 year.

The case University in question in its planning, recognizes and takes cognizance of the very significant societal movement in the United States and in the global society from an industrial to a Post-Industrial, High-Technological, Third Wave Society. As a consequence, the University makes the basic assumption that no one can be considered truly educated in today's society who is not knowledgeable about the intricacies of high technology. It is, therefore, developing courses in Computer Science. Engineering Technology, etc., to meet the needs of the society. It has made it mandatory for all entering freshmen to take at least one course in Computer Literacy. Because of inadequate Teaching Personnel and Computer Terminals, it is unable to meet all of the needs of the freshman and sophomore classes. The same adequacy and paucity of computer resources have significantly retarded software development in the Computer Assisted Instruction for two important academic units.

This University also recognizes that Blacks are considerably underrepresented in the quantitative disciplines of physical and biological sciences, mathematics, engineering and computer and information sciences. This case University is in grave danger of having very severe cuts made in its 1984-85 Title III appropriation when most of the funds have already been expended. At the same time that high level funding have already been expended. At the same time that high level funding has seemingly been made to other colleges and universities for the same activities related to high-technology, cuts amounting to $363,744 have been recommended for this Title III funded program over a two-year period.

The impression is given that the Title III funded educational institutions, particularly the HBCU's are essentially welfare recipients, are really not viable and should not be assisted any more. The fact is that these are the institutions with a demonstrable track record of taking students where they are and moving them to the point where they are competitive. These are colleges and universities that continue to send students on to graduate and professional schools. The basic assumption of these colleges is that tht high rate of unemployment and the feminization of poverty, are drains on the U.S. economy and can be ameliorated by considering education, particularly a college education, as the basic answer to upward socioeconomic mobility. As education ncreases there is a marked decrease in the above negative indices.

It is of significance that at the undergraduate level, 42 percent of Black college students were enrolled in two-year colleges in 1980 with a very low retention rate when compared to that at HBCU's. This places in proper perspective the attempts made by persons to de-emphasize the role and importance of four-year HBCU's that enroll 35 percent of all Blacks who attend four-year colleges. These HBCU's also confer forty percent of bachelor's degrees earned by Blacks. The need is great for a much higher proportion of Blacks to be enrolled in four-year colleges. It is in this setting that these students are more likely to be exposed to the skills of problem-solving; to develop the ability to conceptualize and to think logically, rationally and in abstract terms. These are the exposures and experiences that are seemingly more conducive to functioning and coping in a highly complex, complicated, high-technological, third wave society.

In order for the United States to continue to be competitive on the global level, all human resources must be adequately utilized. It is imperative that this sub-committee consider that a reauthorization of Title III is in the best interest of the United States and its national security.

Because approximately 80% of the HBCU's are not eligible for continued funding in the next two years in accordance with present legislation and because, for reasons enumerated above, they cannot be considered developed, it is strongly recommended that legislation be enacted extending the length of Title III. More importantly, however, is the expansion of Title III by incorporating all of the elements of The Institutional Aid Act of 1985.

The cost to the United States of inadequate education and training is high. It costs approximately $25,000 to keep one person in a Federal penitentiary.

Benjamin Franklin is, therefore, of contemporary relevance when he stated that the only thing more expensive than education is ignorance.

SUMMARY RECOMMENDATIONS

The following summary recommendations are herein in order:

1. Recognizing the significant value and worth of these educational institutions eligible for and funded by Title III funds to the continued growth, stability and strength of this nation, the implementation of Title III must be supported by legislative language, which charges the U.S. Department of Education to work closely and not confrontationally with these institutions in actualizing their potential for making even more significant contributions to this great nation. Investing in these schools is not a "handout" but an investment in the future of this country.

2. These educational institutions must be regarded as holistic educational social systems. Consequently, rigid and subjectively drawn lines of demarcation separating "developmental" and "non-developmental" activities must not be drawn, established and implemented by administrative memorandum.

3. Legislation must address the construction of a valid and reliable instrument to determine eligibility and that Pell Grant data must not be considered the only independent variable.

4. Past funding levels of Title III, particularly as they pertained to HBCU's, were not conducive to the effective attainment of the goals of the legislation within the time frame established. The funding level should, therefore, be significantly raised without provisions for arbitrary cuts and reductions for the duration. The concept of Title III must also be expanded and extended to incorporate all elements and dimensions of the "Institutional Aid Act of 1985" which is the title of both H.R. 2907 introduced by Congressman Augustus Hawkins and S. 1328 introduced by Senator Paul Simon.●

ENTERPRISE ZONES: ALIVE AND WELL IN THE STATES

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 30, 1985

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, the July 28, 1985, edition of the New York Times has an article about enterprise zones in several States. The article points out that the enterprise zones in these States have been very successful. Successful in attracting businesses and jobs to decaying areas. And successful in revitalizing distressed area. The States have indeed led the way in proving that enterprise zones are an important tool to rejuvenate inner cities.
